THE TRUE POLICY.

The Pittsburg Dispatch.

Mr. Blaine's letter to Senator Frye, on the subject of reciprocity as connected with the sugar duties, is correct so far as it refers to the desirability of establishing reciprocal relations for the purpose of improving our exports to the sugar producing countries. But so far as it can be constructed to favor a postponement of the sugar reductions until reciprocal duties can be secured by treaty, it is all wrong.

It is not likely to be a profitable task to inquire into the influences which secured the rejection of the reciprocity treaties which would have increased our exports to Mexico, Cuba and Porto Rico, in exchange for free sugar. Both sides to the present controversy must agree that the rejection of those treaties was a stupid blunder from a national point of view. At present the question is one that can be best put in the form suggested by Mr. Blaine's words. He says:

Let us see what is proposed. Our Government has heretofore collected a heavy duty from sugar, amounting one year, in the aggregate, to fifty eight millions of dollars, and averaging $50,000,000 per annum for a considerable period We wish now to cheapen sugar by removing the duty. The value of the sugar we annually consume is enormous. Shall we pay for it all in cash, or shall we seek a reciprocal arrangement by which a large part of it may be paid for in pork and beef and flour, in lumber and salt and iron, in shoes and calico and furniture, and a thousand other things?

Now the question as raised, if not by Mr. Blaine, at least by those who quote him for the defeat of the sugar reductions, takes the following shape: The country is now paying the cost of its sugar, including the duty, almost wholly in cash, and will continue to do so as long as present arrangements stand. Will a change be most promptly reached by removing the burden of the duty and holding out a statutory provision as the strongest inducement for the sugar producing countries to make reciprocal reductions, or by permitting the burden to stand and only holding an indefinite understanding in favor of reciprocity, which, as these governments have learned by experience, has no binding force?

It ought to be plain that the former course is the direct road to the goal which Secretary Blaine desires, and that the postponement of sugar reductions by the tariff bill means an indefinite continuation of the present state of affairs. Is it likely that Mexico or Spain, after having completed reciprocity treaties in 1883 and 1884, only to have them rejected by Congress, will invite a repetition of that rebuff on no better assurance of the acceptance of treaties than they had then? On the other hand, an amendment like that proposed by Senator Pierce will afford a statutory guarantee to these countries that if they give our products free entry to their ports, the privilege of free sugar will be continued to them. It would also convey the equally binding warning that if they do not do so, the privilege will be transferred to other countries. There can be little doubt that with the sugar duties reduced on such a proviso, the reciprocal trade for which Secretary Blaine is working would be fully established within a year. We do not believe that Secretary Blaine's workings would be fully established within a year. We do not believe that Secretary Blaine is opposed to the tariff bill with the Pierce amendment. But as he is extensively quoted by those who wish to defeat the sugar reductions altogether, it is pertinent to point out that such a course would not only perpetuate the present excessive and unnecessary cost of sugar, but would indefinitely delay the extension of South American trade.

On the other hand an equally extreme view is taken by those who, like the New York Press, characterize the Pierce amendment as "free sugar with a string tied to it," or like a Republican Senator quoted by the New York Tribune, who asserts that it "means that if those countries do not give us some more trade the President will reimpose an annual burden of $57,000,000 upon our own people." It should be recognized that the object of extending our exports to these countries is an important one. It is not so important as the reduction of the burden imposed by the unnecessary sugar duties, because the extra cost imposed on our farming population alone by those duties, exceeds the entire amount of our trade with the West Indies. But if that trade can be extended without defeating the reduction it should be done. The argument that this proviso means the re-imposition of all the sugar duties is unfounded. It is a vital point that sugar can be brought to this country from the Spanish West Indies, from the Danish West Indies, from the British West Indies, from Mexico and from Brazil, not to speak of San Domingo, Hayti, Venezuela and Colmubia. Every one of these countries will understand that if it does not accept reciprocity the other sugar producing countries will have an advantage over it in a trade aggregating $70,000,000 annually, amounting to 70 or 80 per cent of the value of the product. Upon such an enactment there can be little doubt that free and cheap sugar for this country would be permanently secured concurrently with the extension of our trade in provisions and manufactured goods to those countries.

If our statesmen can not unite on a proposition which so clearly harmonizes all legitimate commercial purposes the conclusion will be somewhat irresistible that internal political considerations will have more influence in producing the difference than the improvement of trade.

THE BATTLE SHIPS.

The Nile, the new English battle ship of 12,000 tons, has just made her trial engine trip, developing 12,103 horsepower and making 16,88 knots on the measured mile under forced draft. This speed certainly raises the question whether the three new battle ships proposed by the Navy Department are fast enough. The circulars prescribing the qualifications for the three seagoing battle ships provided by the last naval appropiation bill require a minimum speed to be maintained for four consecutive hours of not less than fifteen knots an hour. The Nile was laid down April 8, 1886, and launched March 27, 1888. Her design and requirements are, in other words, of four and two years ago. In view of the advance made in the past four years in speed and engine-power, it ought to be possible to design and lay down in the next six months an 8500-ton battle ship which shall be as fast or faster than the one taking her trial trips now, even if the latter has a displacement of 12,000 tons. The Trafalgar, designed five and launched three years ago, with substantially the same displacement and exactly the same length and breadth, made 16,219 knots with open and 17.282 knots, with closed stoke holds, in her trial trip last year, after her original length and draft had been increased for more armor. The Victoria, with 11,000 tons and the same armor as the Trafalgar, but with two 110-ton guns instead of the 67-ton guns on the Trafalgar, made last year 17.25 knots and 14,244 horse-power in a four hour run. Even the Anson, the last of the much disputed "Admiral" class, still earlier vessels, made 16-523 knots with open draft and 17.435 knots with forced draft.

These are all and every one of them vessels of one half more displacement than the proposed battle ships, though the Trafalgar has estimated to cost just what one of our new battle ships will or in the neighborhood of $4,500,000. But they are all vessels from plans of four or five years ago, and moved by engines one to three years old in design. With recent progress, is it not well in the vessels of the future to aim at as high a speed, or even a little higher, than has yet been attained? It is true that our new battle ships, with 18 inches of side armor going 7 feet below the water line are to carry as heavy side plating as the new type of English battle ship of far heavier tonnage, and run the platiny a foot and a half lower down. Even as compared with the Nile and Trafalgar, the plating of the new vessels is nearly as deep, and, taking recent improvements in steel plates, even more effective. With 4 xiii inch breech loading rifles these vessels will be as well off for heavy armament as the Trafalgar with 4 xiii and a half inch 67 ton guns. The eight v inch guns of the Trafalgar are met by 4 viii inch and 4 vi inch breech loading rifles and the 8 6 pounder rapid fire guns of the Trafalgar are replaced by 16 6 pounder guns.

Considering that this thickness of armor and this weight of armament is put on a displacement two thirds of the size of the Trafalgar and Nile, it becomes plain that speed has been laid aside for offensive and defensive power. Speed can be obtained also only at a heavy cost. Mr. W. H. White, the British Director of Naval Construction, said a year ago that it was necessary to double horse power to rise fifteen to seventeen knots an hour, and that doubling the horse power again would not add two knots more; and, while we presume the Messrs. Cramp would contract and for a consideration cheerfully prove to Mr. W. H. White that his estimate of the cost of increased speed was exaggerated, the statement fairly expresses the difficulty and expense of adding to speed; but in view of the constantly increasing value of speed in naval engagements and the steady progress of offensive over defensive power, it may be fairly questioned if part of the armor of the new battle ships ought not to have gone into engines. The heavy armament is exactly in line with our best naval traditions. The heavy guns we have mounted and fought on small craft have amazed men in every naval war, and our naval officers have always heartily echoed Lord Beresford's famous phrase that he wanted a vessel that could say, "We can hurt you," rather than one that said, "You can't hurt us." Speed, even at the cost of lighter armor, is an addition to offensive strength. In armament and armor the new battle ships will be able to fight anything that floats; but in speed there are a large variety of battle ships that can pick their time and place to fight them.

The new protected cruiser provided by the same bill, on the other hand, with its twenty one knots for four hours, asks in speed for all that can now be done. Its battery of 4 vi inch breech loaders and 8 iv inch rapid fire guns is lighter than the armanent usually put on our cruisers; but the vessel is planned to carry armor, and have long coaling endurance.

Death's Visit.

On Monday we announced in the DAILY NEWS the death of little Jennie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Eevy, of State College. Now it is our painful duty to chronicle the fact that two more of that family have passed beyond this vale of tears.

Mary, a ten year old girl and Emma aged 6 years, have gone to join their little sister in the last beyond. Out of a family of eight one week ago now but five remain. Diphtheria is the dread disease that has wrought such sad havoc in this once happy family.

Mrs. Samuel Gingerich, of Rock, died on Monday. She was quite an aged lady. The remains were interred in Bellefonte.

Cook Your Meat Well.

Medical Inspector Taylor, of the Philadelphia Board of Health raises his voice against eating meat in the quantities its eaten during the hot season. He urges the necessity for the thorough cooking of meat of all kinds. For instance, a housekeeper will place a piece of smoked beef or sugar-cured ham where it can be reached by flies or expose it unnecessarily to the heat, thinking that it is perfectly safe. The result is that it soon becomes unhealthy and is eaten while in that condition. A piece of fresh meat exposed for only a few minutes to a tainted atmosphere becomes poisoned, more or less, and should be thoroughly cooked, if eaten at all.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, July 28, 1890.

Secretary Windom is preparing, at request of the President, a comprehensive statement of the amount of revenue derived from the importation of sugar by the Government. It is generally understood that this statement is to be used as the basis of a special message which the President proposes to send to Congress, giving his ideas of what amendments the Senate should adopt to the tariff bill. There is a doubt as to whether the President will advise the adoption of reciprocity outright, as advised by Mr. Blaine, or some sort of compromise. The probabilities are strongly in favor of his taking the latter course.

The tariff debate has so far been confined entirely to the democratic Senators; long speeches have been made by Senators Voorhees, Vance and Morgan. The republicans are waiting until they have definitely determined just what points in the bill are to be covered by the amendments, and one of them said to-day that he did not think the vote would be taken on the bill before September.

Speaker Reed has appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the "Original Package" bill, passed last week, Representatives Reed, of Iowa, Thompson of Ohio, and Oates of Alabama. It is regarded as practically certain that the House amendment will be agreed to by the Senate.

The committee on Rules, reported, and the House adopted a resolution instructing the committee on Pensions to investigate the charges which Representative Cooper of Indiana, recently made on the floor of the House against Gen. Raum, Commissioners of Pensions. The committee in its report stated that all of the essential statements of Mr. Cooper are hearsay, and his conclusions conjectural, and that they did not know whether they are true or false; but, continues the report "whether true or false your committee believes that an investigation should be had to the end that the truth may be ascertained; the public service must not even rest under a suspicion and the character of public officials must be so clean and their administration so honorable and straightforward as to command the public confidence and withstand the most careful scrutiny. Every public official should invite the most careful investigation of his public and official acts and your committee believes that Gen Raum, whose public and private character has been heretofore without taint or suspicion, will gladly promote the investigation." Gen. Raum is very much pleased with the action of the committee, and of the House He refused to dignify the charges by officially asking for an investigation; but he has not hesitated to say privately to members of the committee that he wished for it.

Senator Sherman has he people with him in his effort to have the "Congressional Record" edited. If ever here was publication that needed a careful, painstaking editor, it is that same cumbrous and misnamed "Congressional Record."

Postmaster General Wanamaker has resumed his warfare upon the Louisiana Lottery, and is determined, if it can possibly be done, that Congress shall adopt the bill which the House committee on Postoffices has just reported, which prohibits lottery circulars and tickets, lists of drawings, money or drafts for purchase of lottery tickets, or newspapers containing lottery advertisements or drawings from being carried in the mails or delivered by carriers, and imposes a penalty of a fine not exceeding $500 and imprisonment not exceeding one year upon any person depositing such matter in the mails.

The House committee on Elections expect to decide the celebrated Arkansas Clayton-Breckenridge contested election case this week. It is believed that it will by a party vote decide that Mr. Breckenridge is not entitled to the seat which he holds, and Col. Clayton having been murdered while trying to obtain evidence in the case, another election will be ordered.

Senatar Frye has received another letter favoring reciprocity from Secretary Blaine, and that together with the correspondence in the Behring Sea negociations, has caused Mr. Blaine to be the most talked about man in the United States. Mr. Blaine is very much in earnest about reciprocity, and calls attention to the fact that as long ago as February he made a statement to the Republican members of the House committee on Ways and Means urging them to consider reciprocity in making up the new tariff bill. With one exception—Representative McKenna of California—the republican members of that committee decline to talk on the subject Mr. McKenna says that he has from the first favored Mr. Blaine's ideas.

Even the democrats admit that Mr. Bliane deserves great credit for the manner in which he has handled the Behring Sea matter.

Not a single democratic Senator or member endorses the absurd talk about boycotting the north in this case the Federal election bill becomes a law with which southern telegraph wires have of late been burdened.

GOVERNOR BEAVER is too thorough a soldier to allow the shadow of political considerations to creep into the question of promotions in the National Guard. General Snowden is a Democrat in politics, but he is a sterling patriot and efficient officer, as his services to the country in her hour of need, and his record since then, proved uncontestably. The honor of succeeding Ex-Governor Hartranft as major general of the State troops is well bestowed, and the public will ratify the choice without respect to party. Colonel Deckert, also a Democrat established his bravery in the field. He has been an able and popular regimental commander, and his promotion to be brigadier general will be approved as a well deserved compliment by his fellow citizens, who have twice ignored party lines to honor him in civil life.

Another Result of the High Tax.

This morning there was not a drop of water to be had from any hydrant on every hill in the town. Now why is this? It must certainly be because of the raise in the water tax or else there is some terribly bad management somewhere. Certain it is that no water has been used for sprinkling purposes for the past thirty-six hours and why the water should not flow on the highest hill in Bellefonte is a mystery. There undoubtedly is need of a thorough investigation and reformation somewhere and, if it don't soon come, Bellefonte had better sell out to Roopsburg.

Our Story Teller

THE EXILES

A RUSSIAN STORY.

"Poor soul!" exclaimed the exile; "he must have died of want."

"Anything is better than the fortress," said the dancing-master—"anything!"

Conducted by M. Lafleur, Yegor hired a little wooden house, the last one of the town on the shore of the Lena, the only one, perhaps, which was not surrounded by those palisades of planks driven into the ground, which give an air so devoid of sociability to the inhabitants of Yakoutsk. The new secretary of the governor had some partitions hastily put up in it, in order to provide a suitable apartment with an alcove for Nadege and a little room for the child.

The installation was rapidly made. In Siberia beds are unknown. People sleep on a heap of skins or carpets and cover themselves with the same materials. In the matter of furniture, the young people, with their fixed idea of escaping on the first occasion, limited themselves to strict necessity.

It was then the middle of November; the days had only three hours of sun and two hours of twilight, with the prospect of seeing the sun vanish altogether during December and January, giving place to a night which seems eternal. As far as the eye could reach the ground was hidden beneath a winding-sheet of snow. And it was thus for many months!

Sometimes, this thick snow heaped itself up menacingly against the houses, rolling over upon the roofs and breaking them in. A violent wind, in its turn, accomplished its ravages. The centigrade thermometer descended below thirty degrees, below even forty degrees.

M. Lafleur came in a sledge to visit his new friends.

"Brou!" uttered he, ridding himself of his furs. "Happily, wood is not wanting in this miserable country! And to think that the natives are in the midst of this snow, as in a mass of wadding! How do you think they live? They pursue, in the night which surrounds us, the zibellines, to pay the Czar's tax, the reindeer, the foxes of all colors and the bears. They fish in summer and hunt in winter."

"Ah!" murmured Nadege, "when shall we again see spring!"

"Spring, Mademoiselle!" said the dancing-master. "It is here much harder and much more disagreeable than winter. People sometimes sink up to the breast in the moist soil, which is mixed with a kind of white marmalade."

The life led by Yegor in the governor's family would have been supportable, in spite of all, had it not been for his cares of the future and his thwarted projects of liberation which required those precious instants he was forced to lose.

He filled the album of the governor-general's wife with caricatures, sketches and colored designs, executed quadrilles upon the young ladies' piano, played chess with the governor, invented charades, and organized dancing-parties to which the few ladies of Yakoutsk were invited. All this for fifty-four dollars a month.

M. Lafleur was at all these little parties given by the governor. At these reunions the dancing-master resumed all his advantages. Nothing was more comical than to see him regulate the movements of the "Siberienne" with the delicate sounds of his pocket violin, interrupted during certain steps the time for which he beat himself, supplying in these intervals with his voice the missing music of the instrument.

On such occasions he assumed the noble attitudes of the old French school, which had reached him by one knew not what traditions; then, suddenly, shaking himself, loosening his joints and twisting himself, he mingled the free and easy movements of the balls of the barrieres of Paris with the classic rigidity of the dances of the old-time court.

Yegor finally obtained, to his great joy, permission to hunt with the governor's guns. He had bought, secretly, at Irkoutsk, at the moment of his departure, a double-barreled carabine and a pair of revolvers; but these weapons remained carefully hidden.

The chase would give him an opportunity to study the region. He made many excursions during the winter, and was even accompanied, once or twice, by Mlle. Agrafena, with a few Cossacks as escort.

He sometimes quitted the town with a sledge drawn by horses, and remained away three days, in order to accustom the governor to prolonged absences.

Yegor was treated with affability by the governor and all his family. Notwithstanding, he never took Nadege to the government palace. He asserted that the young girl suffered from weakness to justify her seclusion.

One spring morning, Yegor, at an early hour, had started with his sledge over the softened snow. Driving himself, he was proceeding, as fast as two good horses of the country could go, along the great western highway, when he met another sledge in which was a traveler carefully enveloped in furs, in whom Yegor thought he recognized the man of the whip of the Oukboul mine, the corporal whom he had struck and defied. Such a meeting in this spot was passably strange! What strengthened Yegor in his supposition, almost inadmissible, however, was an involuntary movement he surprised. He could not doubt that this man was the Russian, Yermac.

It was he, in fact. Yegor knew it with certainty that very day.

Yermac had been relieved of his vow of expiation and humiliation. The governor of western Siberia, when he learned the motives for the resignation of the Ipravsnik of Nertchinsk and was informed of his entrance into the service of the mines, resolved to induce the honest functionary to reconsider his determination. He fell to work and succeeded in overcoming his obstinate resistance and excessive scruples. At last, Yermac yielded; but he made a condition, namely, that he should leave the district. General K—— gave him a letter of recommendation to the governor of Yakoutsk and enabled him to go to him.

On the day succeeding this meeting, Yegor saw the ex-guard enter the governor's office. An instant afterwards, the latter summoned his secretary.

"Monsieur Semenoff," said me, "this is our new chief of police, M. Yermac; aid him in taking possession of his post. M. Yermac, however, has been long in the administration and has no apprenticeship to undergo."

The governor noticed the constrained air of the two men, the smiles of irony upon their lips, and their strange glances.

"Perhaps you know each other already?" said he.

"Your Excellency is not deceived," replied the new chief of police. "Monsieur seems greatly surprised to see me again here."

"After having left you with those convicts at Oukboul; yes, I admit it," said Yegor.

"Ah! very well. I see how it is!" exclaimed the governor.

"But," resumed Yermac, "I beg Monsieur to believe that the chief of police of Yakoutsk has left at the bottom of the mine the remembrance of the sometimes rigorous relations of the Oukboul guard with the convicts placed under his surveillance." And he added, with emphasis: "I never remember but one thing—the strict accomplishment of my duty."

"I extend to you my compliments, Monsieur," answered Yegor, "and regret that the somewhat haughty fashion in which you have spoken forbids me to thank you personally."

"Very well, Messieurs, very well," interrupted the governor, who feared that the words exchanged might become bitter. "You will have leisure to renew your acquaintance under different and, above all, better conditions."

These words cut short a sort of presentation deprived of all cordiality.

Yegor saw in the presence of the former corporal of the mines another obstacle to his projects.

"This Yermac," thought he, "cannot have completely forgotten the affront I put upon him. Should he find occasion to avenge himself while executing his duty, he will seize upon it; he is an attentive observer capable of making an excellent police bloodhound. He will watch me closely."

Something, a secret presentiment, told him to beware of this fatal ——

CHAPTER VI.—THE ESCAPE.

Summer came, the fair season opened, and the merchants of Irkoutsk brought stuffs, utensils and tea, while from the shores of the Arctic Ocean, from the borders of the Sea of Okhotsk and even from Kamtchatka came fur-hunters loaded with spoils and searchers for the tusks of the walrus and mammoth.

Yegor Semenoff took advantage of the opportunity offered to purchase provisions and garments indispensable to the execution of his project.

But, though he acted with the utmost prudence, the chief of police Yermac, who watched all his actions with the evident desire of taking him in fault, knew that the governor's secretary had made considerable purchases.

Further, the authorization of marriage demanded of the Czar had arrived and had passed through the hands of the chief of police, who could not comprehend why the young couple did not hasten to profit by it. What could be their motive except to free themselves by flight! The former Ipravsnik of Nertchinsk well knew the repugnance felt by the exiles for contracting these marriages which bind the future of the children they may have. His attention redoubled and took the character of veritable surveillance.

Yegor did not confine himself to procuring what could assure materially the success of his attempt. He studied minutely all the maps of the country he could procure, questioned the merchants and hunters, and learned the language of the natives. At last, he found himself prepared to adopt the following plan:

Furnished with a passport from the governor for himself and his betrothed, he could, at the commencement of the journey, take advantage of the relays of horses established upon the right bank of the Lena as far as the spot where the Aldan flows into the great Siberian river. At Aldanskoi, a town situated at the mouth of the Aldan, he would find horses purchased by M. Lafleur, and a Yakoute guide, selected by the same M. Lafleur, whose kindness was inexhaustible.

The Parisian, in his hatred of tyranny of every kind, had placed himself entirely at Yegor's disposal. He was to go on before, in the little cart serving to transport the merchandise in which he dealt. Besides the camp tent, the provisions and the winter garments, he was to take the little Pole. They could leave Yakoutsk without exciting the least suspicion—such was their belief at any rate.

M. Lafleur would accompany the fugitives to the Yerkho-Yensh Mountains. This chain of mountains crossed, the exiles were to hide in one of the impenetrable forests which cover the region beyond, there to await the first snows.

They counted upon winter as an auxiliary to level the roads, freeze the rivers and cover their flight with its darkness. It was only with a sledge that it was possible for them to go towards the north as far as Nijni-Kolimsk, the last Russian town, situated at the point where the Kolima pours the tribute of its waters into the Arctic Ocean, and not far from the polar regions where the immortal Nordenskiold was able to confirm his discovery of the north-east passage.

According to the calculations of Yegor Semenoff, they could hope, with the favor of the long winter night, to penetrate to the country of the Tchoukchis. Although the tribes of these natives are not equally hospitable, Yegor did not shrink from the difficulties he might encounter when this moment should come; nothing could ever approach the infamous life of a convict from which he was escaping.

Among the Tchoukchis it was already liberation; it would only remain to find the means of reaching Behring's Strait, on the return of the summer season and of the free waters, which bring yearly into that locality American and English whalers.

The interesting daughter of the poet Davidoff, in whose eyes Yegor assumed unnatural proportions, drew from her chaste love all the stimulants capable of increasing the ardor of the man who was about to expose his life for her, wishing to relieve her from the shame of being an exile's daughter. She could not forget that Yegor, thanks to the favor he enjoyed with the governor, had ameliorated and rendered supportable her situation, and that it was, above all, to fulfil the sacred promise made to the dying old poet that he aspired to liberty.

Yegor already caught a glimpse of that liberty.

But besides this seductive prospect, what terrible punishment in case of failure, what dolorous expiation! Yegor, in his moments of weakness, remembered the convict disfigured with sulphuric acid whom he had seen on arriving at the Oukboul mines, exposed to every kind of insulting treatment. What fate, if he failed, was he preparing for poor Nadege and little Ladislas? For himself an ignominious death and for them a prison, that is to say, death also, slower but as sure!

At last, he could hesitate no longer!

One evening, in the early part of September, when the temperature was quite mild, Yegor and Nadege quitted Yakoutsk. Yegor had spoken for a long while to the family of the governor of a two or three days' trip that he wished to make upon the right bank of the Lena which was still unknown to him; he came very near having for a companion on his journey the governor's eldest daughter, who, more than once, had, on similar occasions, imposed herself upon him.

The fugitives took a hired boat to cross the Lena, which is encumbered with little islands dividing it into several arms. One of these arms of the river was not less than three miles wide.

Grave and serious, as at the commencement of a perilous enterprise, they saw recede without the least joy the sad capital with its broad, deserted streets, its dull habitations ensconced behind high wooden enclosures, the belfrys of the four or five churches, and, towering a little above the miserable huts, the convent and the bazar.

The night was clear and starry. There was not a sound in the country, not a shadow behind them. Soon, in the east, a faint, gray dawn seemed to announce to them the morning of a free and happy existence.

"Courage, Yegor!" murmured Nadege, pressing the young man's hand.

"Ah, my beloved!" said Yegor, smiling softly. "I am carrying you off and you are allowing me to do so! Born far from here, both of us, I came, as it would seem, to seek you out amid the Siberian snows and bring you back to the warm heart of friendship, devotion and love! Have you any regret on leaving!"

"Yes; one only."

"What is that!"

"I regret the scarcely closed tomb I am quitting."

And the young girl's eyes filled with tears, at the remembrance of her father. Yegor turned away his face to hid his emotion.

A moment later, Nadege resumed:

"Do you really love me, Yegor?" said she. "It is not generous obedience to the supreme desire of my dying father which alone is making you act!"

"Do I love you?" answered Yegor, warmly. "Demand my life and you will see!"

"Your life! And what would I do without you upon this earth, now altogether a world of exile! No; live for me, if you love me. You are worthy of liberty, be free, and deliver me also; I shall then doubly belong to you!"

Yegor strongly grasped the hands of his betrothed.

Half an hour later, they disembarked upon the right bank of the river. Thanks to his passport, Yegor obtained two relay horses kept by the Yakoutes. The journey was beginning in earnest.

Nadege had a superb look on horseback. Modest like a well brought-up young girl, she possessed that vivacity of bearing and that special grace which are acquired in the active life of a traveler.

Guided by a Yakoute, running on foot before them, they followed for a long while a narrow path, which, turn by turn, wound among willow bushes or crossed plains cut up by ponds. Broad day had come. From one of these ponds some teal arose. Yegor, who carried, slung across his back, a gun "borrowed" from the governor, killed three of these birds.

An instant after, on the edge of a wood of larch trees, the riders dismounted and the guide kindled a fire, spitted the fowls and, in his fashion, prepared breakfast.

The travelers approached the blazing and crackling branches, for the morning air was keen. The roasted teal, served upon slices of bread, which Yegor drew from a small sack of provisions, and washed down with koumis made of fermented mare's milk, obtained from the Yakoute in exchange for some brandy, formed an excellent repast. A kettle filled with water, drawn from a neighboring pond, besides, permitted the making of some cups of tea.

"Ah! if we only had our dear Ladislas with us!" exclaimed Nadege. "He may, perhaps, be suffering from cold and hunger!"

"Do not torment yourself about him, dearest," answered Yegor. "M. Lafleur is a man full of resources, who, certainly, will not let him want for anything. They passed by here," added he, showing his companion upon the humid ground the recent traces of the wheels of the honest and brave Parisian's cart.

He had scarcely finished speaking, when, in the distance, upon the road opened by them a short time before, appeared a man on horseback.

Nadege shivered with fright.

"Yegor," said she, "are we followed!"

Yegor, who had suddenly become disturbed, looked in the direction of the horseman.

"It must be a traveler," said he, "but it is certainly not a native—that may be seen from his prudent fashion of trotting. It is a European, and, probably, a Russian."

The Yakoutes have keen sight. The guide of the fugitives, in his turn, began to examine the man who had attracted their attention. He described to them with precision his costume, bearing, and face.

"If it should be the chief of police!" murmured Yegor, grasping the barrels of his gun.

"What do you say, Yegor!" cried Nadege, alarmed. "Do you foresee any danger!"

"What danger!" said Yegor, casting upon his companion a look supplicating her to hide her trouble from the eyes of the guide. "Are we not going to Aldanskoi! Well, there will be one more of us. This man has no guide; he can go in our company!"

"I believe that he has followed in our footsteps thus far. How else could he have avoided losing his way! You know how frightful the roads are!"

"Several times, in fact, it has seemed to me that I heard the trot of a horse behind us. All is now explained. In any case, Nadege, reassure yourself. Whoever shall dare to cause you pain shall pay dearly for it!"

Nadege approached Yegor.

"Yegor," whispered she, "if we were to mount our horses, could we not try to escape!"

"Impossible!" he answered, also in a whisper. "Our guide would not make himself our accomplice, and we should compromise everything."

"But, at least, do not expose yourself!"

"What are you saying, Nadege! Do you think that I have waited so many months for the first day of our liberation to obey a summons without resistance! Do you know what would await me—what would await you—under such circumstances! I must either deliver up or defend both our lives!"

"Defend our lives! By what means, Yegor!"

"By every means!" answered the latter. He again gazed at the horseman and added: "It is Yermac!—it is, indeed, the chief of police. He is following us. I thought he had forgotten; but to a man of his mould death alone brings forgetfulness."

"How you frighten me!" murmured the young girl. "I no longer recognize you!"

"Ah! it is because I love you and they wish to separate us!"

"Yegor, I supplicate you—"

"I will do all I can to put what I owe you in accord with what I owe honor and humanity. If I were a common malefactor, I would submit at the sight of a gendarme; but I am an innocent man, the victim of an odious persecution. For myself and for you I have the right on my side and, perhaps, I am the stronger!"

The Yakoute alone was yet eating the remains of the teal. He was devouring with a capital appetite the morsels which the travelers appeared to have abandoned. At the same time, he took copious draughts of koumis and brandy.

Yegor was not deceived. It was, indeed, the chief of police who was approaching, and it was not chance that had put him on the track of the fugitives. For a long while, every time the governor's secretary left Yakoutsk, he had caused him to be followed. This time, his habitual suspicions had assumed such proportions that he had decided not to confide the task to anybody but himself.

When he learned that the exile had quitted the seat of government with his betrothed, preceded by Davidoff's adopted son and M. Lafleur, he felt assured that it was with the intention of not returning. He wished to have the cruel satisfaction of arresting him himself in his flight. Neither hatred nor the remembrance of the affront put upon him actuated Yermac. He had a higher incentive. He considered himself the instrument of the law and was obeying the harsh obligations of duty.

When he was within twenty paces of the spot where Yegor had halted, Yermac dismounted from his horse and fastened it to a larch tree. He advanced towards Yegor, who arose at his approach.

"Out for a little trip, Monsieur Semenoff!" said he, with a smile on his lips. It was not an amicable, hypocritical smile, but a smile of proud satisfaction and triumph.

"Out for a little trip, as you see," answered Yegor.

"And here is a young and charming lady," continued the chief of police, turning towards Nadege, "who fears neither wretched roads nor dangerous accidents."

Nadege bowed, growing red and pale by turns.

"We are going to Aldanskoi," said Yegor, with assumed carelessness. "My betrothed and I desire to get some idea of that part of the country, with which we are acquainted only through the vague accounts—"

"Of the merchants who frequent the Yakoutsk fair," interrupted the chief, with a satirical meaning that did not escape Yegor. "I also am going to Aldanskoi," added he.

"Indeed!" exclaimed Yegor, ironical in his turn.

"My sole vexation is that I know the way only by this direction—constantly follow the right bank of the Lena."

The chief of police, having brought his own horse with him, was not escorted by the guide furnished at each relay station.

Yegor had every interest in not letting this man, in whom he saw an irreconcilable foe, outwit him; the contrary would expose him to being stopped. He, therefore, invited him to profit by his guide as far as the nearest relay station and to accompany him to Aldanskoi.

This proposition somewhat astonished Yermac, but he affected to accept it with genuine pleasure. He thanked the exile and added:

"Who would have thought, when we were at the bottom of the Oukboul shaft, that we would again encounter each other, on a fine September morning, among the marshes of the country of the Yakoutes!"

"Do not talk of the mine," said the exile. "It recalls, to my great confusion, facts that I have bitterly regretted, believe me, Monsieur!"

"We will drop it, then," he said, dryly, and he colored.

The exile noticed that he uttered not a word that could open the way to a reconciliation.

"I believed this road utterly unavailable for carriages," said Yermac. And he pointed to the traces of the wheels of M. Lafleur's little cart, attentively watching the exile as he did so.

"I thought the same," he replied. "I was told so, but I see my informant was mistaken. We have just breakfasted," continued he, "on the spoils of the chase. You see—teal killed in the neighboring pond. I am going to shoot another brace or two; they will be better for our next meal than dry biscuit."

"I will wait for you here," said Yermac.

"You do not hunt! Why then do you carry a gun!"

The chief of police vaguely caught a glimpse of a hidden design in Yegor Semenoff's words and the invitation they conveyed; but he shrunk from seeming afraid and replied, resolutely:

"Now I think of it, why should I not participate in the amusement! I am your man."

Yegor ordered the guide to go in advance and asked Nadege to get into the saddle. He motioned to his dog Wab to follow the latter. The Yakoute, on foot and singing an improvisation, led by the bridles the horses of Yegor and the chief of police.

Nadege, before departing, cast upon her lover a supplicating look, which she strove to render persuasive. He understood its generous signification.

The two hunters, full of distrust for each other, passed along the edge of a pond over ground covered with a profusion of dwarf cedars. Nadege heard them discharge their weapons several times. From afar, she even saw a number of large birds fall, stricken by their shot. This only partially reassured her.

If she could have seen Yegor closer, and noticed his fierce eyes, compressed lips and clenched hands, she would have feared some violence on his part. The young man, dismayed and overwhelmed, no longer hesitated at the thought of crime. He loaded his gun with bullets, and, without further delay, when Yermac took aim at a fen-duck, which had just risen, covered him and fired.

The chief of police heard whistle about his ears not small hunting shot, but a ball, which shattered the face of his cap. He no longer doubted the intentions of the escaped convict, for, in his view, Yegor was nothing else. He thought of replying in kind, as he was also furnished with like munitions, but that would bring on a duel, and the rigid functionary immediately discarded the idea as an egregious weakness, an effect of fear. It was not his business to disembarrass himself of his adversary, no matter how criminal he might be. His strict duty forbade that, except as a last resort. It was alive, with his hands tied behind his back that he should return him to the seat of government.

But he had not, however, sufficient heroism to await the second shot that was intended for him. He allowed himself to fall among the leafy bushes, just as the second report was heard. Once on the ground, Yermac slung his gun across his back and crawled upon his hands and knees, gliding through the clumps of dwarf cedars. In this way, he succeeded in getting altogether out of range.

The fact is that Yegor, after having reloaded his weapon, advanced cautiously, his finger upon the trigger, in the direction where the chief of police had concealed himself from his sight. He feared a trap, a surprise, a sudden attack, but found no one on the spot where he supposed the chief was in ambush. He scoured the surrounding thickets, still maintaining his caution, and, at last, lost an exact idea of the respective positions they had occupied at the moment he assailed the too zealous agent of the law.

Finally, he found himself again on the edge of the path which, in the distance, Nadege was following. His face was livid, his eyes wild and his legs bent beneath him.

"I have, perhaps, killed him," murmured he, "or wounded him—which amounts to the same thing in such a place as this, without help! But he brought it on himself!"

He hastened to rejoin Nadege. He heard the noise made by the horses as they trampled over stony ground. Ten minutes afterwards, Nadege saw him arrive alone, with a disturbed expression on his face. She swooned and slipped from her animal. He caught her in his arms.

"Ah, Yegor! what have you done," murmured she, on opening her eyes. And she gently repulsed the young man.

"It was for you!" cried Yegor. "For you and your brother—two lives! If I only had been involved, I should have hesitated—yes, I swear it!"

"What are we going to do!" demanded Nadege, after a silence painful for both.

"First, remount your horse," he answered.

And he aided his companion to regain her saddle.

Then he unfastened from his leather belt a teal and a fen-duck suspended by the legs, and, calling the guide, who had gone on before:

"Take these fowls," said he. "And now let us be going!"

"But this horse!" said the guide, pointing to the animal of the traveler left behind.

"The horse! Set it free. It will not stray, and its master will rejoin us presently. Forward!"

The little party started. The guide resumed his interrupted chant, and Yermac's horse, abandoned upon the path, after having lifted his nostrils to snuff the wind, began to neigh.

"Poor beast!" Yegor could not help exclaiming.

"Poor man—and wretched Yegor!" added his companion.

Are You Represented!

The public mirror of the business men is the newspaper. Their occupation, should be before the public in its columns. If you are in any kind of employment, no matter how small, it is to your advantage to let the public know of it. A stranger picks up a newspaper published in a town of two or three thousand population, and sees but one hardware, grocery or dry goods store advertised in the paper. He comes to the conclusion that the town needs more stores for the size of it and if he is of a speculative turn of mind will likely look the town up with a view of locating there. He may be disappointed when he visits the town to find plenty of stores but only one or two of them advertising the same. He locates, goes into partnership, or perhaps on his own resources, and then hunts up the printer to help him out. The printer spreads the news, the people go to his store and in a short time he is the envy of his fellow merchants who do not advertise. The news paper man is often requested to send sample copies of his paper to different parts of the Union. Some write for a copy saying they wish to find a good physician, lawyer for merchant in the town. If you are one of them and are not before the reader, it is not at all likely you will be selected. The paper should receive your support, no matter how small an undertaking you are engaged in, and you will find that it pays you better in the end.

A DAY OF CEREMONY.

State Officials Cause the Soldiers to Walk Erect.

MT. GRETNA, PA, July 25.—This has been a day of ceremony at Camp Gretna The presence of Governor Beaver, State Treasurer Boyer, Auditor General McCamant, President of the Senate Penrose, Senators Delamater, Brown and Thompson and other state officials make it necessary for the guardsman to put their best foot foremost.

The morning was spent in brigade drills and separate battallion evolution At 5 o'clock this afternoon a review of the entire force in camp including the United States army section was given in honor of Governor Beaver, who was on horseback with his staff. General Snowden and staff accompanied the commander-in-chief, and with their trappings the reviewing party presented the most brilliant appearance. The weather was auspicious, the Sun being hidden behind a cloud made marching very pleasant.

When the procession started, with the United States army division on the right, the thousands of spectators covering the slope rising from Lake Conewago, cheered to the echo. The pageant was the most imposing ever seen at this military resort and it will be difficult to surpass it to morrow, when the division will again be paraded in honor of President Harrison, Secretary of War Proctor Major Gen Schofield and staff and other military dignitaries, who will arrive in camp about 2 o'clock to morrow. Last night Gen. Gobin had a line of pickets thrown out along the South Mountain, three miles from camp. It made a line at least a mile in length and videttes at the road crossings and men on post thoroughly performed their duties. It was a most satisfactorily experiment.

This evening pickets were detailed from the First brigade. At 9 o'clock to night an exhibition was given by the United States signal corps from the summit of "Governor Dick," the mountain overlooking the camp. It was an interesting trial and was watched with great interest.

Last night was the reunion of officers and men who was stationed at Johnstown after the flood. Colonel Spangler presided and Colonel Patton was secretary Interesting speeches were made by General Hastings, whose remarks at times were very pathetic, and Chaplain Maguire, of the Fourteenth regiment It was decided to admit the newspaper men who were at Johnstown to honorary membership in the organization which it was resolved to form. A S McSwigan, of the Pittsburg Dispatch, was appointed a committee to prepare a list of newspaper men who were in the Conemaugh valley after the calamity.

The matter of transportating so large a body of troups is no small matter and all that the officers at headquarters hope for is that the return home will be accomplished as successful as the coming to camp. The entire cost of transportation this year will be $22,000, which is a very low rate, being less than three-fourths of a cent a mile,

A Lock Haven fire.

Once again Lock Haven has been visited by the fire demon and a large amount of property gone up in flame and smoke. An industry that was getting ready to do more in the future than it has latterly been doing in the past has been entirely wiped out and we understand from one of the proprietors it will not again be resumed.

Yesterday afternoon between 3 and 4 o'clock, heavy volumes of smoke were observed ascending from the river bank at the foot of Mill street and soon the cry of "fire" was heard and large numbers of people, men, women and children, hurried to the place from all quarters. The scene of the conflagration was he Kintzing and Bickford saw mill and the progress of the fire was extremely rapid. Before the steamer and fire companies reached the spot the mill was half destroyed and then it was impossible to save it.

LOSSES AND INSURANCE.

By six o'clock the firemen had the fire under control, but it burned along until nine or ten o'clock, in fact the three companies were on the ground all night. How the fire occurred is not known: There were between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 feet of lumber stacked in piles, about one fourth of which was destroyed. The loss in lumber is between $20,000 and $30,000 on which is an insurance of nearly $6,000. The mill, for which Kintzing & Bickford paid $13,000, was fully insured for $10,000.

Is Kept Very Busy.

H H Benner, claim attorney, continues to have a rush of business at his office filing claims under the new law of June 27, 1890. Major Benner is a crippled soldier, and we would advise all soldiers, widows and dependent fathers and mothers to call and file their claims for a pension with him. He charges no fee unless successful. Room No. 14 upstairs in Crider's Exchange.

FASHION AT SUMMER RESORTS.

Lawn Party And Afternoon Dresses: Shoes: Accessories: Waistcoats.

As the season progresses, the favor shown lace insertions whether on skirts or corsages, becomes evident. From five to seven rows, according to width and desired dressiness, are not too much for a skirt and while the corsage should correspond in some degree, yet the great freedom allowed at present in corsages does not render obligatory any special correspondence. Stylish afternoon and lawn party dresses are made of ecru nainsook embroidered in whit or colors, the most popular patterns being dots or small sprays and unusual distinction is attached to underdresses of changeable taffeta with ribbons matching a shade in the silk. In harmony with the caprice for putting thin and thick material together, rows of velvet ribbon are sometime let in the overskirts with belts and rosettes or floating ends to match, but gowns of the character just mentioned are more suitably finished by lace insertions which are likewise conspicuous in silks of light quality. Mulls over silk and with insertion let in, are very fashionable.

EMBROIDERY.

is so prominent as sometimes to be termed the leading garniture of the day Cashmeres trimmed with applique embroideries are noticeable at all dressy afternoon gatherings and much is accomplished by gilt garnitures on pale or light colors with a certain proportion of white and gold. The latter combination is particularly effective in yachting costumes that were never quite so tasteful as this summer, owing doubtless to the increasing attention given to the sport. For seaboard dresses, whitesergeoften takes the place of cashmere because more likely to resist the salt air and especially for yachting, white braid comes in as a complement to the gilt trimmings.

COLORED SHOES

introduced last season, have increased in favor and fashionable ladies now have an assortment to match dresses. Certainly nothing can be more coquettish than pink or red shoes when appropriately worn and with hosiery to match, while the prominence of both white and black in dress, has caused an era of white and black combinations in kid that look peculiar to the unitited. Undressed kid is the material chosen for the white portion with patent leather for the black and for colored shoes in general, undressed leather leads. Tan foot wear however as generally understood has not entirely had its day, but ranks second now to later introductions and peculiarly to russet and dark tan shades unlike what has been in vogue. In shape, the low Oxford tie is chifley seen and all dressy styles have round pointed toes and long vamps. Silver buckles, embroidery or braiding give finish.

SILVER

and silver mounted accessories are extremely popular and the latest convenience for keeping them at hand, is a wide silver pin which insures safety to a bon bon box, viniagrette, fan, pencil or any other small article now held in esteem. As if all this were not enough, there is a rage for silver bangles, no professed belle being willing to wear less than seven at a time while the maxium of twenty is not very uncommon. It may be supposed that silver jewelrp is in the ascendancy and silver mounted umbrellas distance all others.

WAISTCOATS.

are varied and often very rich. One of heliotrope is ornamented by diagonal stripes of black velvet, another of crimson is brocaded with small white flowers; a third of heavy corded white silk is trimmed with gold braid and a fourth of white silk is trimmed with silver and white silk embroidery. White cloth jackets give completion.

The two men who had been sitting together in the seat near the door of the car became engaged in an animated controversy, and their loud voices attracted the attention of all the other passengers. Suddenly one of them rose up and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I appeal to you to decide a disputed point. My friend here insists that not more than three persons out of five believe they have souls. I take a more cheerful view of humanity than that. Will all of you who believe you have soul raise your right hands?"

Every right hand in the car went up.

"Thank you," said he with a smile "Keep them up just a moment. Now, will all of you who believe in a hereafter please raise your left hands also?"

Every left hand in the car went up.

"Thank you again," he said. "Now while all of you have your hands raised," he continued, drawing a pair of revolvers, and leveling them, "my friend here will go down the aisle and relieve you of whatever valuables you may happen to have. Lively now, Jim."

THE REVOLT QUELLED.

Buenos Ayres Insurrectionists Completely Subdued.

CENTRAL AMERICA'S WOES

San Salvador Preparing for a Grand Coup. Desperate State of Affairs in Guatemala—Attempted Assassination of President Barillas.

LONDON, July 30.—The Argentine legation has received the following:

"BUENOS AYRES, Monday, 2:30 p. m.

"Announces that the insurrection has been completely subdued. The president of the republic and the national cabinet are given orders from the national government house. The finance minister has been set at liberty. JUAN GARCIA."

Senor Garcia, the signer of the above dispatch, is the Argentine minister of finance. He was taken prisoner by the revolutionists at the beginning of the outbreak on Saturday.

Doubted in London.

LONDON, July 30.—The terms for a settlement of the troubles between the revolutionists and the government, according to a dispatch to The Times from Buenos Ayres, are: That the civilians who have taken part in the insurrection will not be punished. All captains of the revolutionary forces and all officers above the grade of captain will be deprived of their rank. The artillery of the insurrectionists will be surrendered Wednesday.

The situation as above depicted is based upon the statement of President Celman. Other dispatches received from Buenos Ayres say the situation is unchanged, and the prospects for a compromise are not encouraging. The consensus of opinion, according to these dispatches, is that the matter must be fought out.

THE WAR IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

San Salvador's Army Re-enforced by Ferocious Half-Breed Indians.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 30.—The San Salvador forces, flushed with success and jubilant over their repeated defeats of the Guatemalans, are preparing for a grand coup. The army, under the command of Gen. Ezeta, has been re-enforced by the addition of 6,000 picked half-breed Indians, ferocious little devils and fierce fighters, and the intention is to push after the demoralized Guatemalans, flank them, and force an unconditional surrender at once.

In Guatemala affairs are in a desperate condition. On Sunday night a desperate attempt was made to assassinate the president, Gen. Barillas. The president was with a number of guests in his parlor when he was rushed upon by an Indian, whose name is Xaching Tubseq. In one hand he held a revolver, and in the other was grasped a huge machete, or hunting knife. With the long knife he attempted to rip Barillas up the body.

The president eluded the blow, drew his revolver from his hip pocket, kept the man at bay and shouted for his aids-de-camp. These rushed in and seized and disarmed the Indian, who was marched off to prison and placed in solitary confinement. The Indian confessed that he had been employed by the conservatives to do the deed. He gave the names of Antonia Valenzuela, Dr. Pedro Molina Floris and Jose Diaz Duran, a lawyer, as the principals in the affair with whom he treated. He said that Duran had sworn to take the life of Barillas because the latter had exiled Duran's brother and had ruined him.

GEN. M. L. BARILLAS.

The Guatemalan soldiers are unpaid, dissatisfied and inclined to be rebellious, and an insurrection is in progress in the interior.

Guatemala Accepts the Issue.

NEW YORK, July 30.—The following explains itself:

CONSULADO GENERAL DE GUATEMALA EN NEW YORK.
NEW YORK, July 29, 1890.

To the United Press:

I have just received the following cable from Minister M. Dieguez, of Guatemala, at Mexico:

MEXICO, July 28, 1890.

Guatemala accepted war provoked by Ezeta. Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica signed treaty with Guatemala to demand resignation of Ezeta and to re-establish legal regimen in Salvador. Respectfully,

JACOB BAIZ, Consul General.

From non-official sources Senor Baiz learns that the declaration of war does not give general satisfaction in Guatemala, and that the members of President Barillas' cabinet have advised him to suspend hostilities with San Salvador and direct his energies toward quelling the revolution in his own republic. The dissatisfaction among the military is most pronounced.

The chief fear on the part of the government is that their soldiers will join the revolutionists. Gen. Manuel Beteta, the leader of the malcontents, is very popular with the troops. Any insubordination on the part of the soldiers is being summarily dealt with. President Barillas held a council of war last night. A conscription was ordered, and the government issued a proclamation warning all natives of San Salvador to leave Guatemala within forty-eight hours.

What San Salvador's Consul Says.

Senor Francisco Masias, the representative of San Salvador in this city, is confident that his republic will come out victorious. He showed Tuesday a reporter copies of several cablegrams which have been sent to the Salvadorian consul general by the minister of war at San Salvador. One of them was to the effect that the frontiers of San Salvador were covered by a large and well disciplined army, and that President Ezeta will not delay hostilities.

Another, which is dated July 25, enumerates a series of Salvadorian successes. According to the war minister, Gen. Antonio Ezeta captured, after a fierce struggle, Atescatempa, which the enemy endeavored in vain to recover. The rear guard of the Salvadorian army took Chingo by assault, and occupied Conco almost without resistance, seizing a great store of artillery and munitions of war. The total number of Guatemalan troops defeated was 12,000 men.

"We have no revolution now in our republic," said Senor Macias. "Every man is enthusiastic and will stand by Gen. Ezeta. The general says that he will march on Guatemala and depose President Barillas. He is a man of his word."

NEW YORK'S BALLOT LAW.

A Serious Question on Which an Official Decision Will Be Given.

ALBANY, July 30.—Attorney General Tabor says that he will give no more opinions to cities of the state upon the various sections of the ballot reform bill. He says that they all have corporation counsels with enough intelligence to give such opinions, and he will allow such officials to decide for their own cities.

Queries from villages will be answered with a copy of his full diagnosis of the law. In answer to a question as to how many sample ballots should be printed, he said that the number of ballots to be thus printed is not specified in the act, and it is therefore to be left to the judgment of the county clerks to determine how many shall be printed for such a purpose.

A serious question has arisen in Brooklyn, Buffalo and Albany, which the attorney general says he may have to take official cognizance of and give an opinion on. It is a question upon two sections, one of which reads that a voter may have ten minutes in a booth to prepare his ballot, and the other which reads that he may spoil three ballots and still have another.

It is argued by one side that the section means ten minutes for each ballot, and that a dozen voters could thus waste eight hours preventing others from voting. The other claim is that a voter could only use ten minutes altogether. Attorney General Tabor says it is the most serious question that has arisen. An official decision will soon be given.

Political Pointers.

POTTSVILLE, Pa., July 30.—The Democrats of the Thirteenth district renominated Hon. James B. Reilly for congress.

NEW YORK, July 30.—The executive committee of the league of Republican clubs of this state met at the Fifth Avenue hotel on Tuesday, to fix a time and place for holding the state convention. It is thought that the convention will be held in the first week of September at Saratoga. There are sixty-five members in the committee. Up to a late hour no agreement had been reached.

A Dose of Mob Violence Threatened.

HASTINGS, Neb., July 30.—A gang of horse thieves supposed to be from the Black Hills country has been doing effective work in this community for the past two weeks, and has succeeded in running off between thirty and forty horses. Yesterday about seventy-five farmers met in secret session in this city, organized and propose to resort to mob violence if the business is continued and the thieves are caught.

A Railroad Pontoon Bridge.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., July 30.—The Pacific Short line pontoon bridge across the Missouri river has been opened for traffic. It is built partly of piles and partly of pontoons. A sixty ton locomotive and a carload of coal only sunk the bridge ten inches in the water. The bridge cost $30,000, and will be used until a permanent bridge is built.

From the Trance to Death.

MOUNT MORRIS, N. Y., July 30.—Miss Lizzie Long, the young lady who has been in a kind of trance since the 13th inst., has died. A tumor on the brain is now said to have been the cause of her strange illness and death.

Died of His Injuries.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 30.—James Gildea, aged 39 years, who fell to the ground from the railing of the grand stand at Culver park while intoxicated a few days ago, died of his injuries at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning at the City hospital. The deceased was a showman and resided in New York. He leaves a widow, who lives in that city.

A Maniac Murderer Caught.

MIDDLEPORT, N. Y., July 30.—David Yago, the escaped maniac who last Saturday murdered Postmaster Schultz at Wolcottville, and who has been hunted ever since, was caught napping a short distance west of here Tuesday morning, and captured by Chief of Police Fuller, of Medina. He was taken to Lockport in the afternoon.

They're Catching Seals Just the Same.

VICTORIA, B. C., July 30.—Reports from the sealing fleet just received show that the boats have taken 15,747 skins. None of the schooners was molested or even sighted by any of the American cutters. They had good hunting weather, and judging by their half season's catch the full season's catch will be a very successful one.

In Fear of a Prairie Fire.

ATCHISON, Kan., July 30.—Reports from Rocks county are to the effect that nearly everything in that section is burned up by the drought, and that there is great fear that a prairie fire will sweep the country. The grass is as dry as powder, and would burn readily.

The Weather.

Fair weather; southerly winds; stationary temperature.

A cloudburst on Horse creek, Walker county, Ala., did $100,000 worth of damage, but no lives were lost.

President Harrison will be present at the Grand Army parade in Boston on Aug. 12.

The report of the Johnstown flood relief commission shows that $4,116,801.48 was expended in the Conemaugh Valley and other places in Pennsylvania. A balance of $67,208.47 remains. The loss of life in the valley was 2,142 and 78 outside.

The alleged Marquis de Leuville will sail for the United States, and promises to enter suits for libel against various newspapers that have made derogatory statements regarding his supposed engagement to Mrs. Frank Leslie. His legal adviser has exhibited letters showing that she was willing to marry him before she last sailed from Europe.

CLARKSON ON THE WEST

The Postmaster Returns to Washington from His Big Trip.

A GREAT COUNTRY, HE SAYS

The Colonel Relates His Impressions of the Region West of the Missouri River. It Is Understood He Will Resign After Making His Report.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—First Assistant Postmaster General Clarkson, who has just returned to Washington from an extended trip through the northwestern states, says: "I have been gone nearly two months, and have traveled 9,000 miles, passing through fifteen states. I spent nearly all the time in the country west of the Missouri river, where there is such remarkable development and growth. My tour comprehended all the important cities west of Chicago and north of Kansas City. No one can understand how rapidly that great country is developing until he sees it. It has not had in any of the departments of the government the official facilities that it is entitled to. This is largely because of its extraordinary growth.

"I traveled on the fast mail from Iowa to Portland, Ore., which makes a good deal of the time at seventy miles an hour, and the service is very efficient, and other fast mails are being brought up to the standard of efficiency. The postoffices in the cities that have been doubling every year or two were looked into, and I have returned with strong recommendations for increased allowances for nearly all of them, and some of these have already been granted. The department is anxious to try and keep up with the country in its prodigious growth and increase of population and business.

The Development Wonderful.

"I made a pretty thorough tour of Wyoming, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington and California. The development of the states in the mountains and on the Pacific slope is simply wonderful. The Puget Sound country, in western Washington, is the finest I have ever seen. The cities are most wonderful in their growth. I have never seen a country to equal that region in climate, soil, resources and beauty of scenery.

"The larger half of the country lying west of the Mississippi river is undergoing great prosperity. It has many great questions which must soon be met. The silver question has been fairly settled. It is pretty well satisfied with that. The question of irrigation is now, I think, a larger one with all the mountain statesmen than even that of silver, and the government ought soon to devise some vast system of water storage, so as to utilize the moisture provided by nature for the immense areas of land now useless because of want of water, or else it ought to enact legislation protecting private capital in providing such storage.

"The people are not talking much of politics; they seem to desire rest in that. Different from the east, the west is not yet discussing the contest of 1892."

The Colonel to Resign.

It is understood that when Col. Clarkson completes his reports on postal affairs in the west, which will be in about two weeks, that he will tender his resignation to the postmaster general.

An Attack on Speaker Reed.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—During the house debate Tuesday Mr. Struble, of Iowa, made a bitter attack on Speaker Reed for his action toward gentlemen interested in public building bills. He spoke of the speaker's manner as sneering, and contrasted it with the courteous manner of Mr. Carlisle when he was speaker. He asked if the members would continue to submit like cowards to the speaker's dictation. His remarks were applauded vigorously by the Democrats.

Wants an Investigation.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—Mr. Oates, of Alabama, introduced in the house Tuesday a resolution reciting the charges made by the Farmers' Alliance that millions had been spent in lobbying the silver bill through congress and calling for an investigation.

Purchased by a Syndicate.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—A syndicate composed of Representative Baker, of New York, who has declined renomination, Mark J. Bunnell, of Washington, and W. W. Rochester, of Rochester, N. Y., have purchased Virginius Island, near Harper's Ferry. The island has many natural facilities for flouring mills and there are now several located there. A stock company with a capital of $100,000 will soon be formed and additional manufactories will be built.

Gone to Meet Keely.

SARATOGA, July 30.—The property of the Griplethernic Motor company was sold at auction here to satisfy judgments secured by Judge C. S. Lester. The company was organized in New York several years ago for the purpose of manufacturing motors in which latent heat should be utilized in generating motive power. The motor has proved a failure, and the company failed to pay its obligations. The property, consisting of five patents and the right to use them, was bought in by J. R. Chapman, of Saratoga, for $300.

Became Insane on a Train.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., July 30.—Frank Graham, a young man en route from Chicago to East Verda, Pa., his home, became insane on the Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburg passenger train. He attracted the attention of every one. Shortly after the train left this city he attacked a little girl who was sitting in front of him and who, he said, insulted him. A police officer was telegraphed for at Marion, and he was removed to the jail and his family notified.

ANNIE GOODWIN'S CASE.

An Excited Crowd Cries Out "Lynch Him" at Dr. McGonegal.

NEW YORK, July 30.—Police Justice Power took no action in the case of Annie Goodwin Tuesday morning other than to send all the papers before the grand jury. Justice Power considered the action of the coroner's jury in holding the principals on a charge of homicide sufficient and satisfactory. No further legal action will be taken in the matter until next Monday, when the case will be presented to the grand jury.

If the only evidence in the possession of the authorities was that already brought forward at the coroner's inquest there would be but little chance of convicting Dr. McGonegal and the others. Only enough evidence to warrant the jury in holding the prisoners for further action was presented.

The most convincing and sensational part of it all has been reserved for the trial. It will certainly be a surprise to the principals. If they entertain any hopes of escape these will be rudely shattered when the case gets fairly under way. As culminative proof of the doctor's wickedness, the detectives say they may bring forward witnesses who saw the doctor carrying away the bodies of children, not one or two, but half a dozen at a time.

Dr. McGonegal was thoroughly frightened Monday evening. It is the first sign of weakness he has shown since first he was arrested. It was just as he came out of the general sessions building in the custody of Detective Mott.

DR. M'GONEGAL.

When the persons making up the crowd outside caught sight of the doctor's gray hair and beard they set up a shout and pressed closely about him. The scene that followed has not been witnessed here for years.

As the old doctor came down the steps the crowd became highly excited and pressed closely about him and the detective. There was at first a single cry of "Lynch him!" The crowd took up and echoed this cry in a wild way. The crowd pressed closer, and many hands reached out to seize the doctor. His wrinkled face became a deadly white, and he began to tremble all over. His eyes rolled appealingly from one to the other in that crowd, but met no sympathy.

With a cringing fear the old doctor turned to Detective Mott, as if about to ask the latter's aid. Mott had taken warning. Except that he turned a trifle pale and brought his teeth together with a snap Mott betrayed no emotion. With a quick movement his hand flew behind him, and when he brought it forward again the light glistened on a revolver in it. Mott kept the revolver out of sight as much as possible as he turned and faced the crowd.

It was a critical moment. There's no knowing what might have happened had not two or three policemen in uniform bustled through the throng and tried to disperse it. The sight of the uniforms seemed to allay the excitement, and during this lull the prisoners were put aboard a car. Then the crowd scattered.

DEATH CAPPED THE DAY

A Scene of Merriment Changed to One of Awful Horror.

THREE INSTANTLY KILLED.

An Excursion Steamer with Fourteen Hundred Souls on Board Crashes Into Another Vessel—A Scene of Wild Disorder—Ten Persons Missing.

BALTIMORE, July 30.—A crowded excursion steamer, the Louise, returning from Tolchester Beach with 1,400 souls on board, crashed into the Bay line steamer Virginia, bound for Norfolk, at Fort Carroll. In an instant merriment was changed to horror, mad shrieks filled the air, children were trampled underfoot, strong men rudely pushed aside weak women—all in an insane endeavor to get away from danger. Three persons were almost instantly killed, a number were badly injured, and ten persons are still missing.

The dead are Mrs. Catharine M. Keyser, Charles Grantner, 5 years old; Daniel Koop, 10 years old.

Among the injured Adolph Miller cannot recover, and others are sure to die of their injuries. It is believed that those reported as missing jumped overboard and were drowned. Search was made all Tuesday morning for bodies, but none have thus far been recovered.

The Virginia struck the Louise on the starboard side, twenty-five feet from the stern, tore away the joiner work on the upper and lower decks, and cracked one of the iron plates of the hull. The Louise slowed down as soon as Capt. Truitt saw that a collision was inevitable, and thus a more serious disaster was prevented. There were no fatalities on the Virginia.

Capt. Bohannan's Story.

Capt. Bohannan, of the Virginia, makes the following statement: "We had passed Fort Carroll about one minute when I saw a large three masted schooner under sail bound up. I was then heading southeast by south, one-quarter south. I ported about three-quarters of a point to clear the schooner, when suddenly I saw a steamer coming up behind the schooner. The steamer blew two whistles, starboarded her helm and opened her green light full.

"I immediately stopped and backed full speed astern, and blew several short blasts of my whistle as a warning or danger signal to the advancing steamer. To these the steamer did not reply. I could not change my course in response to the two whistles, for I was then under the bow of the schooner. It was a miracle that she did not run into the Virginia, but by the good seamanship of her master she got by. I had to run this desperate risk in my effort to prevent running into the steamer at full speed.

"The steamer, which proved to be the Louise, was, when first sighted, well off my port bow and about one mile away. I next saw her come from under the stern of the schooner, and when I saw her green light open full upon me I said to my mate, John Mason, 'That steamer can't clear us.' Soon afterward the collision occurred.

Crushed by the Crowd.

"The headway of the Virginia was nearly gone by the time the vessels came together, but the Louise was going at a pretty fair speed. The Virginia struck the Louise about the after starboard gangway, but we were going so slow that we were turned nearly around in the stream, and when we drifted apart the Virginia nearly headed up the river. It was unfortunate that when the vessels came together the passengers rushed to the side we had struck. I shouted to them to go to the other side, but those nearest the rail and in most danger were prevented by the crowd that crushed against them.

"As soon as I saw a collision was inevitable I ordered the boats cleared; and the crews were quick to respond. It was probably four minutes from the time we were in collision till we had drifted apart, and I steamed back to the Louise, and I asked if I could render assistance. The response was "No." I then looked after my own vessel. I found my iron stem twisted to starboard from the main deck to beneath the water line, and the forward compartment was full of water.

"I had the seventy-three passengers on board quietly sent as far aft as possible so as to prevent any panic that might arise in the event of their seeing the danger. I remained in the vicinity after the Louise left for the city, but saw no one in the water. When the Virginia and the Louise came together a man, woman and boy, whose names I did not learn, leaped on board of our boat and returned with us to the city."

A Fearful Scene.

The damaged part of the Louise extended into the hull eight or nine feet. Camp stools, seats and cushions were stained with the blood of the killed and injured. The officers of the Louise found in the wreck the body of a dead boy. Directly opposite was the mangled body of a dead woman. The bodice of her dress had been torn off. Her hands had been crossed by sympathetic strangers, and a copy of the Bible lay near her head. She wore a ring. It gave no clew to her identity.

In the middle of the saloon, between the two dead, was a smashed baby carriage. The baby was not to be found.

THE SARATOGA RACES.

A Large Attendance at the Track Despite the Threatening Weather.

SARATOGA, N. Y., July 30.—Notwithstanding the cloudy and threatening aspect of the weather there was a large attendance at the race track Tuesday. The card, however, containing as it did the American Hotel and Excelsior stakes, was an attractive one and probably accounted for the crowd. There were five events on the programme.

The first race was a three-quarter mile dash, and was won quite easily by Lady Pulsifer, with Blue Rock second and Rainbow third. Time, 1:12¾.

The second race, for the American Hotel stakes, was for 3-year-olds; distance one mile. Considerable interest centered in this event. Ruperta, the favorite, won, with Sir John second and Isaac Lewis third. Time, 1:44.

The third event was a five-eighths of a mile dash for 2-year-olds. Void won, Rosaline filly second, Retreat filly third. Time, 1:04½.

The fourth race was for the Excelsior stakes, and among the starters were such cracks as Kingston and Los Angeles. Kingston was a hot favorite in the pools and was heavily backed. The distance was one mile and a quarter. Los Angeles finished first, with Kingston second and Teuton third. Time, 2:17¾.

The fifth and final race for the day was a selling one, distance one mile. It was won by Royal Carter, Hopeful second and Whitenose third. Time, 1:45.

MINERAL WELLS, Tex., July 30.—As the hacks were returning to Mineral Wells from meeting the west bound passenger train at Millsap a lone masked highwayman held up two of them. One of the hack drivers was relieved of his watch. Four other hacks followed, one of which carried the United States mail sack. The highwayman did not want to rob them.

Narrowly Escaped Lynching.

Ripple was creating a disturbance in a saloon, and when Officer Harder laid his hands on him Ripple turned and with an oath fired three shots, two bullets taking effect in Harder's neck, the other in his stomach. The murderer was arrested, and it was only by the united efforts of a squad of police that a lynching was avoided. Harder leaves a wife and two children.

The Burned Boy Identified.

SILVER CREEK, N. Y., July 30.—The boy who was burned in the wreck here Saturday has been identified as James Cunning, of Nicholson, Pa., aged 20 years, who had been visiting his uncle at Oil City. His uncle and father had his remains exhumed and took them home.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Two Ghastly Corpses the Result of a Domestic Tragedy.

A HUSBAND'S INSANE ACT.

Deputy Auditor Ault Shoots His Young Wife Dead and Then Attempts to Shoot Himself—Foiled in This He Hangs Himself in His Stable.

WHEELING, W. Va., July 25.—A horrible domestic tragedy was enacted at the house of George Ault, at Centerville, Belmont county, O., at 3 o'clock yesterday morning Mandeville Ault, deputy auditor of Belmont county, deliberately killed his young wife and then committed suicide. His lifeless body, covered with blood from a bullet hole in his head, was found dangling from a beam in the barn within an hour after his wife's death. It is believed that he suddenly became insane.

About two months ago Ault, who had been used to the open air life of a farmer was compelled to abandon his desk in the St. Clairsville court house because of ill health, and he took his wife and only child to his father's to rest and recuperate.

"My God, Why Did You Do That?"

At 8 a. m. his wife was awakened by her husband moving about the room. What transpired between them is unknown, but a moment or two later his sister heard the report of a revolver, followed almost immediately by a second shot. His sister ran into a room adjoining Mr. and Mrs. Ault's where Mrs. Ault ran in and cried, "My God, why did you do that?" and fell dead.

The sister ran into the bedroom, where she found Ault lying on the bed, bleeding from a wound in his forehead. He was told that his wife was dead. Seizing the revolver which he had thrown on a shelf, he attempted to shoot himself again. His sister succeeded in obtaining the pistol. Ault then ran out of the room and disappeared in the darkness. At about 4 o'clock his lifeless body was found hanging in the stable.

Attempt to Burn a Hotel.

NEW YORK, July 25.—An attempt was made to burn down the Grand Union hotel, corner of Forty-second street and Fourth avenue, by an incendiary. A bellboy discovered smoke issuing from the air shaft on the second floor. He found a bundle of rags which had been placed on the sill of the shaft afire. The flames were extinguished without any alarm or damage. The hotel contained about 500 people, and great loss of life would undoubtedly have resulted had the fire not been discovered.

Grape Culture.

Is fast becoming a leading business of this country, and that together with wine making requires years of practice. Mr. A. Speer, of New Jersey, one of the largest producers in the East, commenced years ago in a small way to make wine from currants, blackberries and other fruits. He soon turned his attention to grape raising and planted large vineyards of the Portugal vines from which his famous Port Grape Juice is made, which chemists and Physicians says rivals the world for its beneficial effects on weakly and aged persons.

Great Seashore Vacation Trips via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The great success which has crowned the efforts of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to provide pleasant vacation excursions to the seashore for the people of Pittsburg and Western Pennsylvania, as illustrated in the first two excursions of this season, will do much toward making the two yet to come more brilliant and attractive than ever. These trips include in the tickets the most desirable resorts on the Jersey coast, and the long return limit of ten days fills the exact period of the average midsummer holiday. The resorts, from which a choice may be made, are Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City, or Ocean City, and the next date is Thursday, August 7th.

A special train composed of parlor cars and day coaches will leave Pittsburg on the date mentioned at 9.50 a. m., and run through to Philadelphia, arriving at 7.16 p. m. The night will be passed in Philadelphia and the party will take regular trains to the seashore next morning.

Passengers from Pittsburg, East Liberty, Irwin, Uniontown, Connellsville, Scottdale, Stonerville, Greensburg, or Johnstown may take the evening trains leaving Pittsburg for Philadelphia at 4.30 and 8.10 p. m., and proceed to the shore the next morning.

The excursion rate from Bellefonte is $8.65 and the regular train connecting with the special will leave at 10.25 a. m.

Years of Suffering.

"For years I have been troubled with a blood taint that has baffled the skill of the best physicians of Ohio and Indiana, the disease finally effected my eyes to such an extent that I was almost blind. I was then induced to take a course of Swift's Specific S S S and am thankful to say that after taking a few bottles I was entirely cured. My eyesight is entirely restored, and my general health is better than it has been for years, and there is no trace of the disease left. I consider S S S the best blood purifier and general health tonic to day on the market."

A GYPSY ON DREAMS.

Read This, Then Go Home and Eat Too Much Cheese.

Boston Globe.

According to the gypsy, to dream that you bathe in clear water is a sign that you will enjoy good health; if muddy, the death of relatives or friends To see a bath, anger; to take a warm bath denotes happiness; if you take one either too hot or too cold, domestic troubles. If you undress without going into the water you may expect trouble, but it will soon pass away; a sea bath is a sign of honor and increase of fortune.

If any one dream that he or she is ascending to heaven, or is already enjoying its delights, it shows that some joyful event is to happen, such as the birth of an heir to childless people, good fortune to those who are poor, distinction to the wealthy and high honors to the ambitious. If lovers have such a dream it fortells an early marriage under the most auspicious circumstances, and that their wedding will be attended with troops of congratulating friends, who will shower presents upon them. On the other hand, to dream of seeing hell denotes that the dreamer's life is a bad one, and is an intimation to him of reformation.

To see a coffin in your dreams signifies that you will soon be married and own a house of your own. This is a dream girls are always wishing for, says the gypsy book.

If any one should be so unfortunate as to dream that he or she was present at a happy and jolly wedding it denotes that they will attend a funeral; it will not necessarily be at the burial of either of the persons you dreamed you saw married, but you will undoubtedly be called to mourn some friend or relative. To go to weddings when one is wide awake is exceedingly pleasant, but we should be careful how we dream about them. To dream of being married yourself fortells your death.

For a girl to dream of raking newly mown hay is a sign she will be married before the hay is eaten. Young fellows who dream of raking hay with their sweethearts had better get ready for the matrimonial noose, as they are past praying for. If a man dreams he is confined in a prison or jail it shows that he will have honors or dignities conferred upon him, as such dreams go contrarywise; if his arrest and imprisonment worries him it only shows that he will be more delighted with his new dignities. This is an excellent dream for politicians and office holders, as the jail is what they would naturally dream of.

For a girl to dream that she was so sleepy in church as to nod toward the minister is a sign she will have a young person for her husband; if a young man dream this he will be apt to make up to the minister's daughter, provided his position warrants it, and if not, that he will marry a girl noted for her piety. To dream of a widow signifies a reward, to dream you are a widow portends death or disappointment. To dream of a widower denotes strife and quarrels.

A fox is a sign of thieves, to dream of fighting with them shows that you will have to deal with some cunning enemy; to keep a tame fox signifies that you will love a lewd woman or have a bad servant who will rob you. A number of foxes, false friends. If you dream that your mouth is stopped by a gag it denotes that you will soon thereafter be kissed by a pretty girl. To a young girl such a dream predicts that she will see some gentleman who takes her fancy, and perhaps will fall in love with him.

If you dream you are pleased with a pretty chambermaid, milkmaid, or any clean or nice looking young girl whose occupation carries with it the title of maid, it is a good omen for it predicts an excellent match and plenty of children. It also foretells, in many cases, that the dreamer will marry a rich wife. For a married woman to dream this is a sign she will have trouble with servants.

Had Her Revenge.

The Arkansas Traveler.

A woman carrying a faded carpetbag stopped a policeman in Chicago and said: "Which way must I go to the World's Fair?"

Headquarters of the directors are around on Dearborn street.

I don't care a snap for the headquarters. I want to know whar the Fair is—whar they air showing things.

There isn't any place, madam. The Fair wont be opened for three years yet.

What, ain't there no show at all?

Not yet.

Didn't I see in the papers that Congress had sent the Fair to this town?

You may have seen that this place has been selected as the site of a Fair to be held three years from now.

An' thar won't be none till then?

Not that anybody knows of.

An' Congress has fooled me into comin' all the way from Missoury to see that Fair. Look here, this thing is a fraud, an' I believe you had something to do with it. Did you hear me?

Yes, I hear you.

Well, what have you got to say for yourself?

Nothing.

Then you acknowledge that you are a fraud, do you?

I suppoce I am.

An' you air not sorry for it, nuther, I reckon.

No, I am not particularly cast down.

Wall, will you do me a favor, jest to sorter make things squar?

I will try.

All right. Then hold this carpet-bag till I step right over yander an' eat a snack.

Why don't you take it with you?

Feered somebody mout steal it while I'm eatin'. Will you hold it?

Yes, I'll take charge of it for you.

When the woman had been gone half an hour the policeman began to feel uneasy. An hour passed and still the woman did not return. Late that evening the carpet bag was opened. It contained four dead cats, together with the following note:

"These cats lay in an alley next to my house on the west side for four days. I have time and again notified the authorities, but as no notice was taken of my appeal, I have taken this method of disposing of them. You may return them to me when we meet at the World's Fair."

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.

Startling Figures.

Our population in 1750 was 1,260,000. At the end of thirty years, in 1780, it has reached 2,245,000. At the end of thirty years more, the lifetime of a generation, 1810, it stood at 7,299,881. In the course of another generation, or in 1840, it was 17,069,453. At the present time the figures run up to the neighborhood of 65,000,000.

If this ratio of increase is a fair basis for prediction we shall have at the time when the ten year old boy of today shall be forty years of age, in 1920, something like 160,000,000 of people in the United States, and when that man of forty reaches his seventieth birthday, 1950, we shall have close upon 400.000,000, That man's son, who wil be in "youth of his old age" in 1990 one hundred years from now, will be the citizen of a Republic with a population of more than 1,800,000,000.

These figures are rather appalling. They are in the regions of the unthinkable, and so far beyond the reach of our imagination that they are practically valueless.

Events may happen which will materially impede the progress of numbers. But even if we cut the sum total down fifty per cent,, which would seem to be discount enough for any emergency, we still have a population of five hundred million as the result of another century of national life.—[Science.

The Ladies' Home Journal.

For midsummer reading, the August Ladies' Home Journal is like a cooling breeze—all the stories savor of the sea and country, and Julian Hawthorne, Maud Howe, Louise Chandler Moulton, Kate Upson Clark, Jenny June, Dr. Talmage, all vie with each other in story, poem and article. The article on "Promiscuous Bathing" for girls is specially timely. The life of the fashionables at Newport is delightfully told in an article. Dr. Talmage tells how he preached his first sermon, while ten of our most famous women try to answer the question. "Which is the Happiest Hour in a Woman's Life?" Caroline B Lerow says some very helpful things in telling what are the "Essentials of a Good Teacher," while the departments devoted to flowers and talks with girls, are especially well filled this month. Altogether, the August Journal makes the very best of summer reading—pure and bright, and as entertaining as beneficial. The number costs only ten cents, The Journal is published at one dollar a year, at 433–435 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

GENIUS TRIUMPHED.

How the Haughty Gateman Wooed and Won His Lovely Bride.

CHAPTER I.—PROPOSITION.

'No, George, I cannot be your wife. I love and trust you, but I cannot give you my hand against my father's wish, and Louise Swinton buried her weeping face in the crevice of the sofa and bit a piece out of the excelsior stuffing, for she loved George Nesbitt dearly.

True, George was only a gateman on the third avenue, "L" but he had a masculine individuality that had eaten its way into her womanly weakness for demonstrative vitality. He slammed the gates with an air of authority. He jumbled the names of the stations with a delightful mellowness; the traveling public paid him obeisance. In her many shopping tours she had observed all this until admiration grew to love in spite of her wealth and social station.

But Miss Swinton was unhappy. She had a proud, Stock Exchange father, who looked upon the gateman's suit with Wall street contempt, and she felt the the vines of love that had twined round her gate-slamming hero was to be ruthlessly crushed.

But George loved Louise, loved her for her bright ringlets and her father's money. He was not to be undone by her weakness. What were social distinctions to him? Was he not a gateman on the 'L' He would go to the proud father and let him know that a gateman, he who was above all social laws and distinctions, sued him for the hand of his cherished daughter.

CHAPTER II.—OPPOSITION.

'Wnat, you, a gate-slamming automaton; you, a coarse bellower of stations; you—leave my office immediately.'

But an 'L' official is not to be 'phased' by personal abuse. It rolls off him like hailstones off a slated roof. George Nesbit in his official capacity had too long been a bowlder in the rapids of public vituperation to mind the angry spray of an individual. Leaning upon his elevated railroad dignity he waved his hand to the angry broker and serenely replied We shall meet again.

Then he went to 'shut the gates of mercy on mankind.'

CHAPTER III.—POSITION WHICH IS EVERY THING.

Mr. Swinton sat in his cheerful Forty-second street apartments, but his mind was greatly pertrubed. The claw of foreboding was scratching up his mental gravel and riling the currents of his thoughts. The tide of speculation had lately been setting against him and slowly washing out the mortar from his business foundation. A sudden shock and he might tumble.

'Twas in this state of mind a telegram found him. It was from a friend on 'Change and told him of a sudden change in the market. Instantly he knew the fearful significance of the information. Unless he could reach Wall street before the exchange was closed he was a ruined man. He looked at his watch. But thirty five minutes. Could he do it?

In another instant he was rushing along the street, knowing the terrible abyss that yawned before him which even a minute might bridge.

The rumble of the approaching train broke upon his ears as he reached the foot of the "L" stairs.

"South Ferry or City Hall? Which?" he thought. The latter meant a delay of ten minntes, and ten minutes meant ruin.

The dynamics of that thought sent him gasping to the top and out upon the platform.

South Ferry. The green balls could not have been more valuable were they really emeralds.

With the fatuity of many passengers in a hurry Mr. Swinton rushed to the rear platform, the gate of which is always closed first. When he was within two feet of the platform the gate slammed with a vicious bang.

Was this fate? Answer, ye priests of escotercism and occultism.

George Nesbitt stood on the rear platform. Their eyes met, George's glinting with satisfaction, the proud broker's filled with appeal. He felt it was no time for pride, and he pleaded to have the gate opened. His only answer was a glance as cold as the shady side of the North Pole.

"One hundred dollars if you open the gate!"

But no response. No dry goods house on Sunday morning ever looked as passive as the indifferent gateman.

The train began to move. "Five hundred dollars, one thousand dollars!" cried the frenzied broker.

"Yod know my terms," was the haughty response.

"What!"

"Louise."

The answer came hot and steaming Mr. Swinton was stunned with its dreadful alternative. He reeled upon the platform. Alternate currents of a thousand volts shot through his breast The black chasm of business disaster yawned before him. The ice mantled peaks of family pride rose before behind him. His brain, the mountain and the abyss were having it out.

"It's a bargain," [illegible]

Down went the lever, and with the delicacy of a lady handling a new bonnet George Nesbitt assisted his future father in law aboard.

There was a mellow stream of triumph and expectant bliss in the gateman's voice as he shouted down the car:

"Thit-fifth next. Ch'ng Lifry.

The improved method of fastening strings of Pianos, invented by us, is one of the most important improvements ever made, making the instrument more richly musical in tone, more durable, and less liable to get out of tune.

Both the Mason & Hamlin Organs and Pianos excel chiefly in that which is the chief excellence in any musical instrument, quality of tone. Other things, though important, are much less so than this. An instrument with unmusical tones cannot be good. Illustrated catalogues of new styles, introduced this season, sent free.

HIS GIRL CLEARED HIM.

A farmer had some wheat stolen a few nights since, and he was so sure that he knew who the thief was that he went to his county town and secured a warrant for a certain young man living near him. When the case came up for trial the defendant said he could prove an alibi. In order to do this he had brought in "his girl"—a buxom lass of 22. She took the stand and swore that he sat up with her from seven in the evening until broad daylight in the morning.

"People can be very easily mistaken," observed the plaintiff's lawyer.

"I don't care—I know he was there," she replied.

"What did you talk about?"

"Love!" Love she promptly replied.

"What time did the old folks go to bed?"

"I gave 'em the wink about ten."

"Sure he was there at midnight, are you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why are you sure?"

She blushed, looked over to her lover and laughed, and getting a nod to go ahead she said:

"Well, sir, just as the clock struck twelve the old man jumped out of bed upstairs and hollered down, 'Sarah, yer mar wants some o' that catnip tea,' and we got such a start we broke the back of the rocking chair and went over backward kerplumk."

"Then the jury must understand that you were seated on Samuel's knee?

"I object! put in Samuel's lawyer, and his Honor remembered the days of his youth and sustained his objection.—[Ex.

Now in Operation.

The new overall factory, sailing under the name of the Huppert Manufacturing Co., has begun operations. The company starts with five machines, but will add a half dozen more within the next two weeks, and continue adding as the business increases. A number of our town ladies have been employed to operate the machines, and under the supervision of Miss Josephine McDermott, of Bellefonte, who has held a similar position at another factory, they are very readily taking hold of the work and already a number of overalls of various styles have been made that cannot be surpassed for neatness and durability. The better quality of overalls turned out at this factory possess some advantages over those manufactured at other places which will undoubtedly win for them a ready market. The business promises to be a success.

Aaron Lehman, son of William Lehman, came over from Bellefonte last evening to assume the position of bookkeeper for the Company, in which his father is financially interested. Aaron is a bright young fellow, and will fill the position he has accepted with credit.—Phillipsburg Journal.

—On Tuesday Superintendent of the Census, Robert Porter, commenced sending out checks to enumerators. They will be sent out at the rate of 500 daily. There are 50,000 to send out so that it will be three months before the last one is sent out.

—A coffin arrived at the depot in this place this morning. It contained the remains of a colored man by the name of Chas. Lee, who was formerly of Buffalo Run but who died at Scotia. Interment was made at the Union cemetery at ten o'clock this morning.

—An English edition of The Ladies Home Journal is to be brought out in London on a tcale never before attempted by an American magazine, and Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis, proprietor of the Journal, and Mr. Edward W. Bok, the editor, sailed for Europe last week to perfect arrangements.

—An item appeared in the DAILY NEWS a few days ago stating that the Battle of Gettysburg Cyclorama company had left Bellefonte without paying all their bills. Upon investigation we find that in this instance it was the reporter who was imposed upon by the lies of a boy and that the Company paid every bill they contracted. We are sorry the first item found its way into our columns but glad we are able to contradict it and place the fault where it belongs.

—Huntingdon county tax payers are a little bit excited because some one ha had the temerity to intimate that th Commissioners would not be able to meet the expenses this year. Come over to Centre County and get a lesson. Here the democrats are forever blaming the present board of Commissioners with bankrupting the county, not being able to meet expenses, and all that; but nobody takes any account of it and the expenses are always met and a balance remains in the treasury. Such talk is all political bunkum.

THE LOGAN MACHINE WORKS.

Now Comfortably Located in the Old Car Works.

A few weeks ago the Logan Machine Works, Buck and Callaway, proprietors were moved from the old location in the rear of the McClain block to the old car works, A DAILY NEWS reporter visited their new location and found them already comfortably located and in good running order. All their machinery is now in the one room. They have the use of the old car works engine which gives them all the power they could possibly use. The line shafting is placed convenient to convey power all over the building.

Then there is a forge room and one of the best casting houses in the State of Pennsylvania. The proprietors are well pleased with their present location as it anables them to turn out good work on good time and this is now an essential thing with them as their business has grown to be quite immense. They have orders ahead for all the work they can turn out for weeks. In addition to supplying considerable of the local trade in castings and machinery they ship a tremendous lot of work to other places. In this they enjoy an envisable reputation because of the quality of the metal used, which is superior to any in the eastern or western markets, in all their castings. We are glad the Machine Works are meeting with such success as it is an enterprise that promises to grow into something very big in the near future.

—Saturday, August 9, 1890, will be a d letter day in the history of Warriors ark. No such an outpouring of people has ever been witnessed here as will assemble on that day, to join in a monster celebration to be held under the auspices of the Washington Camp, No. 526, P. O. S. of A. The Tyrone, Birmingham, Penna. Furnace, Altoona and other camps will be present to take part in the great picnic. There will be a grand procession, containing many floats and fine turnouts, flags without numbers and banners with mottoes. Four or five bands of music will join in the procession. After the marching the meeting will be called to order in the delightful grove, known as the Funk grove, and where the people will be addressed by Hon. P. M. Lytle and J. C. Clarkson, (Jason). Revs. Ely and Bean will conduct the religious services. A baseball game will be played in the Armory park in the afternoon and cake walks will come off in the evening. All who attend the grand picnic can have refreshments, dinner and supper, just as they desire. The Hon. P M Lytle is perhaps the best posted man regarding the wants of the people and the great economic questions which lie at the foundation of the organization of the P O S of A., in the county. Come and hear him. Don't forget the day—Saturday, Aug. 9.

—The new opera house is now kept locked against all visitors. The work that is now being done—the frescoing and putting up of scenes—is of such a character that will admit of no annoyance by visiting strangers, hence the reason the doors are kept locked. A peep behind the scenes, howeveo, would enable one to see some of the handsomest scenery that can be found in the state and the frescoing is simply indiscribable. It is such an intermingling and blending of colors that produces the most dazzling, as well as harmonious, effect. The citizens of Bellefonte can prepare themselves for a rare treat when hey first behold the interior of the new opera house. By the way, a number of seats are already engaged for the opening play, which will occur just seven weeks from last Thursday night.

—The fifth annual reunion of the Lutherans of Blair county, including the entire territory of the north eastern conference of the Allegheny Synod, will be held at Dell Delight, Hollidaysburg, today. These reunions are always largely attended, sometimes calling together as many as 1500 Lutherans of this section of the State. The programme for the day as follows: Morning Hymn, Invocations Bible Reading, Gloria Patri; Prayer by Rev. E. D. Weigle, of Altoona; Address, "Christian Education," Rev. P G Bell, Allegheny; Hymn; Address, "Church Extention," Rev. G W Elders, D. D., York; Hymn and collection. Afternoon: Hymn; Address, "Home Missions," Rev. J R Williams, Altoona; Hymn; "Reminiscenses of Lutheranism," Rev. H Baker, D D, Pittsburg; Doxology and Benediction.

—Miles Kephart says that after the democrats and republicans have have held their county conventions there will be a meeting of all soldiers, widows and orphans called to meet in the Court House, Bellefonte, Pa. The object is to get a pension for as many as wants it and are entitled thereto and then discuss the political question and find out just where the soldier stands and just where he ought to stand for his own good. Also to determine who will be the best men for the soldier to support for the several offices to be filled.

—Thursday morning at the Shoemaker mines a boy by the name of Daniel Daywalt, who has been working there for some time, fell between the bumpers of the cars and the calf of his leg was badly crushed. It was burst open for four inches and the flesh protruded; he bled profusely, Dr. Tobin, of Stormstown, sewed up and dressed the wound. The boy stood the operation nobly. He is about 15 years of age and the only support of an aged grandfather and sister. Fortunately no bones were broken. The boy is very industrious and he complained only of loss of time from work.

Foot Taken Off.

Frank King, aged forty-eight years met with a serious accident in the Tyrone yard Friday morning about nine o'clock. He was standing on one track just below the scales office, watching a train passing on another track, when a loaded car which had been weighed came down the track upon which he was standing. He did not see the approaching danger and the car which was running quite fast hit him, knocking him down, and the wheels passed over his left leg between the knee and ankle.

The unfortunate man was picked up and taken to the operating room at the depot where he was made as comfortable as possible. The left foot had been nearly severed from the leg and his head was badly cut in several places. Drs J M Gemmill and J M Smith performed the necessary surgical aperation of removing the foot, and dressed the wounds about the head. He was taken to the Altoona hospital on way passenger.

The injured man is a German by birth, having come to this country eighteen years ago. Seven years he spent in the far west and the remaining eleven years he has lived in the east. He worked at Sunbury and of late on a farm near Bellefonte. He was on his way from the latter place to Pittsburg, tramping it, when he met with the unfortunate accident. He has a sister living in New York city.

Williams' Grove Exhibition.

The 17th annual pic-nic of the Grangers of Pennsylvania will open at Williams Grove, Cumberland county on the 25th of August, and continue in session for six days. The William's Grove exhibition has become so popular and so famous that it is unnecessary to more than mention the date of its meeting. R. H. Thomas is the able and efficient president of the Association and his energy and activity always compel success in whatever he undertakes. The exhibition is under the commendation of the National Grange and unanimous support of every State Grange in the Union. New buildings are in the course of construction, many new features have been added and the grounds have been greatly extended. Over 300 families have already engaged cottages and tents and 250 leading manufacturers of the United States have secured space for 1890. The picnic and exhibitions this year will be one of the grandest ever yet held on these grounds, large as have been those that have preceded it. For further particulars address R. H: Thomas, President, Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county, Pa., or H: S, Mohler, Secretary.

Was Your Tax Lowered.

It took the Board of Appeals on the water tax over three hours on Wednesday night to go over and properly dispose of all the appeals that had been made and one of the members told a NEWS reporter that it was three hours of as hard work as he ever did.

When asked what they done he said they had the law (meaning custom or rule adopted by the council) to go by and of course, had to adhere to that. Only, that in case where parties had to carry their water a great distance, a certain reduction was made: or in the case of very large families reductions were also made.

This then means that, unless you come under the head of one or the other of the above, your tax will be rated at $3 per hydrant and 50 cents apiece for each member of your family. How do you like the ultimatum?

Escape of Prisoners.

Two prisoners confined in the jail here, broke jail on Monday night, their names being James Cornelius, of Bellefonte, who was arrested for making an assault on J. M. Schram, during the Knight's Templar demonstration here in May, at the Keating House, and Nathan Stoner, a colored individual in jail for stealing razors. It is said they used a monkey-wrench, but how or where they got it, nobody knows. Efforts are being made to recapture them.—L.H. Democrat.

An Attraction.

C. K. Sober, of this county, and the champion shot of the world has issued a challenge to Capt. Bogardus, or any other expert shot that sees fit to accept, to shoot him a match for $1,000 a side during the Granger's Picnic at William's Grove, August 25th to 30th: Marvelous are the feats accomplished by Mr. Sober with his favorite weapon, and after the match he will give an exhibition of fancy shooting, that will astonish the natives for miles around.

Found Guilty.

One of the Bellefonte foreigners under arrest by the United States officials for not answering census questions, was tried by the United States court at Erie yesterday and promptly convicted. He has not received his sentence yet but it will probably be a light one.

A Marked Improvement.

Any one who has noticed the general bustle which heretofore attended the unloading and transfer of express goods from the east at Tyrone station in the mornings, may see a wonderful change in the way of simplifying and expediting matters now by watching the Adams Express force handle the heavy trade since an important improvement was inaugurated yesterday. Instead of unloading all goods out of cars on the main line and then transferring them on trucks to the branch roads, the company has placed a through car on Pacific Express from Philadelphia to Curwensville which avoids all hurried transfer at this point. This car on its arrival here, with all goods for Tyrone and the two branch roads, is at once detached from Pacific Express and shifted to the branch track. There by means of boards reaching from one car to another, the Bald Eagle Valley goods are quickly transferred and from the other side of the car the Tyrone goods are unloaded, while the packages for points on the T. & C. road remain in the car which is given in charge of the local messenger. The through car returns on the evening train from Curwensville and goes east on Mail Express. This arrangement will certainly be appreciated by Patrons of the Adams Express Company on the branch lines, and by passengers west in the morning. In the past when express traffic was heavy, Pacific Express has often been held fifteen or more minutes at this depot while goods were unloaded and transferred. Yesterday morning the Express force had their car away from Pacific in four minutes and this morning they accomplished the same thing in three minutes, so that the detention of passengers on account of heavy express business is a thing of the past—Herald.

Was it Slanderous!

Oh, but the uptown paper thinks it is smart this week in publishing a foolish communication from a picnic party in Milesburg and then commenting thereon in sharp and cutting (?) phrases. Indeed, we are so sorry that our "foolishness or fiendishness" could cause our neighbor to indulge in any comments or explanations. But then, as we never take any account of them up there—nobody does, that we know of—we will just turn our attention to answering briefly the communication of the picnicers."

In the first place the DAILY NEWS said nothing about the picnic, only in reference to the conduct of the parties on the train. And we will answer the same by asking a few questions. Is it ladylike to perch on the window sill of a car? Is it ladylike to indulge in such loud and boisterous talk that other persons in the car can't hear themselves talk? Is it adylike to ask for and accept candy from a strange young man? Is it ladylike to take the one end of a stick o candy in your month and give a gentle man a bite off the other end at the same time? Is it ladylike to at any time make comments on parties that are of no interest to you and are strangers besides; especially when such comments are made loud enough for such persons to hear?

Now if the young ladies can satisfactorily answer the above questions, all of which can be proven by a dozen persons, we will then tell them something else.

Death of Thomas Sankey.

Thomas Sankey, son of John Sankey, dec'd, died at his home on last Monday morning, at 2 o'clock. He was a model young man, and the main support of his widowed mother in the management of the farm. He bore his lingering illness with Christian resignation. The family have the deepest sympathy of all in this sore loss. Funeral took place on Thursday, Rev. Sarvis officiating. There was a very large concourse of relatives and friends to pay their last tribute of respect, at the funeral of this faithful son and brother.

Interment was made in the cemetery at this place. The pall bearers were, Charles Meyer, James Conley, Samuel Zettle, Thomas Williams, James Gregg and Porter Odenkirk. His age was 22 years, 9 months and 9 days.—Centre Reporter.

The Picnic.

The grangers are at work preparing their new ground, above the railroad depot on the summit, for the picnic in September. They are clearing out the bushes and tearing away the fence. In a few days they will commence staking off the ground and begin the erection of buildings. It is not positively decided whether the railroad company will agree to erect the main auditorium as previously reported was their intention. The many trees planted in the spring are thriving and looking promising, but it will be several yaars before they will be of any benefit. During the picnic an efficient police force will be detailed to watch them and any one mutilating them will be made an example of.—Centre Reporter.

To Destroy Canada Thistles.

A New York farmer says: I had a nine acre lot that was completely overrun with Canada thistles; besides, one part of it, there was a good deal more quack grass than made it agreeable to farm. In the spring four years ago, I put it under barley, and when the crop was cut scarcely any barley could be seen, so thick and high were the thistles; but the yield of barley was 35 bushels to the acre. Just as soon as the crop was secured the plow was started and we plowed deep. Then dragging and rolling followed The weather was dry. In this condition the land was left until about September 1, when the sulky plow was started around the lot, plowing at the rate of three acres a day. The plow was set to run about two inches deep; after that we dragged once and sewed to wheat. The result was that thistles and quack grass are no more to be seen in that lot. Of course dry weather is needed to perform the operation successfully.

Bellefonters Abroad.

Under the head of "Notable people in town," in the Philadelphia Press of Friday we found the following:

J W Gephart, Gov. Beaver's law partner, at Bellefonte, was at the Lafayette yesterday with E C and W P Humes, of Bellefonte. Mr. Gephart and his associates are here on legal business. Mr. Gephart is, for a legal man, a remarkably good natured man, but it is said, that during a recent visit in Philadelphia, his patience was sorely tried. On the occasion referred to, Mr. Gephart, who was about to return to Bellefonte on the 10.30 train at night, had retired to his berth in a sleeper at the Broad street station, and was in sweet repose when the porter of the car awoke him and told him a gentleman out on the platform desired to see him on some important legal business. Mr. Gephart carefully dressed himself and stepped out onto the platform. A stranger approached, suavely extended his hand, which Mr. Gephart politely grasped, and said: 'I believe I have the honor of addressing Mr. Gephart, of Bellefonte?"

"You have, sir," answered the polite Bellefonte attorney.

"You are, I believe, Gov. Beaver's law partner," continued the stranger.

"I have that honor, sir."

"Ah! Well, Mr. Gephart, I am a deputy sheriff. I have a little summons in suit of So and So, which I have been trying to serve all day, but unfortunately I had to forego the pleaure of meeting you at your hotel.

Then it was that Mr. Gephart, it is said, lost his temper for the first time and used some language which was said to be vigorous.

Robert Valentine and Daniel Rhoades of Bellefonte, arrived at the Layfaette last night. They are here with Lawyer Gephart on business.

The G. A. R. Encampment at Boston.

The National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic will be held at Boston, August 10th to 16th, 1890, and for the benefit of comrades and the public the Pennsylvania Railroad company will sell excursion tickets from all principal stations on its lines to Boston, August 8th to 11th, inclusive, valid for return until August 20th, 1890 at greatly reduced rates. By an arrangement entered into by all the lines, however, the return limit may be extended to September 30th if the return coupons are deposited with the Joint Agent of the Terminal Lines, at Boston between August 12th and 19th. Through tickets may be purchased for use on any of the rail or boat lines east of New York. For specific rates from each station consult ticket agents of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

Not Satisfied.

A good many of the tax payers who appealed on Tuesday evening are not satisfied with the way the board of appeals acted in the matter. Be it law or custom to make the assessment on the basis the board claims to have it the tax payer thinks it is not law, if it is custom, to collect considerable more tax than is necessary for the running expenses of the works and to devote the same to paying for something else. And that is just where the tax payer is right. We have heard it intimated that there may be a meeting of the tax payers called to organize and enter protest against the enormous taxation and illegal appropriation.

Escaped Prisoners.

James Cornelius and Nathan Stoner, the prisoners who escaped Monday night from the county jail, are still at large, but Sheriff Leahy stated this morning that he was in possession of information which led him to believe the men would soon be behind the bars again. The prisoners made their escape after midnight Monday night.—L H Express.

Robbery of a Woodsman.

Alexander McMillan, who has latterly been staying between Eagleville and this place, and who is a woodsman, came to this city yesterday and during the evening got full of bug-juice while running around the various places with a fellow that he claimed to know. This morning he found himself lying on the bank of the canal, about 5 o'clock, minus $135 in cash, a silver watch and a gold-plated chain, and his suspicion is that the man who fellow-shipped with him last night committed the robbery. He is is taking steps to if possible recover his lost valuables.—L.H. Democrat.

Æsop has told us the tale of a mule which, from overfeeding, galloped about and felt gay, saying to himself: "My father, surely, was a high-mettled racer, and I am his own child in speed and spirit." Next day he was sick and weary; he then exclaimed: "I must have made a mistake; my father, after all, could have been only an ass." A man, after eating a good dinner, may feel extravagantly joyous; but next day (I don't mean you to infer he feels like an ass) he is surly and grim, his stomach and liver are sluggish, he is morose, despondent and "out of sorts" generally. For Indigestion, Biliousness and all derangements of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is an unequaled Remedy. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to ferment and derange the digestive processes. It cleanses the system and cures pimples, blotches, eruptions and all Skin and Scalp Diseases. Scrofulous affections, as Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Swellings and Tumors, yield to its superior alterative properties.

—We have again been requested to call the attention of all persons, but particularly of all property owners, to the fact that there still abounds within the borough limits a very good crop of Canada thistle, and that it is to the interest of everybody to see that they are cut before they go to seed. Furthermore there is a fine of five dollars imposed for every case in which they are not cut and, unless some persons soon go to work they will get a chance to pay that fine.

—The soldier boys of Company B, arrived home on the 4.30 p. m. train Saturday. The ranks were a little thinner than when they departed a week previous and the boys all looked tired and weary. Notwithstanding this fact there was sufficient reason for them to feel proud. Last week was an important week in the history of Pennsylvania National guards. It was the first time in the history of any State National guard, that they were honored by the presence and encampment with them of U. S. regulars. Then again the General commanding the U. S. armies was there to see them. The president of the United States honored them with his presence, the Secretary of war was there and even so was John Wanamaker besides all the State officials. Verily the encampment was frought with honors for it was there they were given a new Major General. And then the boys of Company B have reason to feel good because the Fifth regiment was one of eight that got their pay before they left the grounds. This is one of the many reforms of our present big Adjutant General and all the soldier boys should ever remember his efficiency long after he may have passed from among them as their guiding hand.

NOT MANY THIS WEEK.

Interesting Facts and Figures—The Weather Makes Little Difference.

During the past week there were but wo marriage licenses granted and they were as follows:

George M. Reed and Ada P. Fitzgerald, both of Bellefonte.

E. C. Nearhoof and Lizzie E. Ocker, both of Rebersburg.

There seems to be a prevailing opinion that winter and spring are the best seasons for marriage but according to the license book there is not much difference. A summary of the number of licenses issued from June 30, 1889, to June 30, 1890, is as follows:

July, 1889, 25; August, 30; September, 39; October, 43; November, 24; December, 37; January, 1890, 26; February, 29; March, 22; April, 34; May, 15; June, 35, and during this month, 18, making a total for the year of 359, or, excepting Sundays, an average of more than one a day. The month in which the fewest were issued was the month of May when only 15 were written. The highest number was written in October when 43 were issued.

The first license issued in Centre county was dated October 9, 1885, almost five years ago, and since then the total number issued is 1572, or an average of about 330 per year. The revenue received from the issuing of these licenses during the past year is $179.50, and for the sum total of all licenses issued is $786, quite a little item that young men have got to pay for the privilege of marrying. From the showing of the statistics it is evident that the number of marriages are steadily, but constantly, on the increase.

All are cordially invited to come from far and near.

—The M.E. Sunday school of Fillmore held their annual basket picnic on Saturday last in the grove at that place. It was well attended and was an occasion enjoyed by all. The state College and Fillmore base ball clubs crossed bats and the game resulted in a victory of 2 to 22 in favor of the college. In extenuation of the Fillmore team it must be said that they never have had any practice.

The Johnstown Flood.

The official report of the Johnstown Flood Relief Commission is at last before the public. It comes in a pamphlet of 110 pages, and covers the subject on every side, in a style that gives the first authoritative utterance on a matter upon which the people have long waited. Secretary J. B. Kreamer completed the report at Carlisle, June 23d last. In it he shows that the Commission expended a total sum of $2,845,140.83. Of this aggregate the Conemaugh Valley received $2,529,936,68, and places outside the Conemaugh $246,475.26.

The mortuary statement of the flood at Johnstown credits the number of lost at 2,145 found and identified 1,115, found and not identified 636, and missing 391. A lengthy narative is devoted to the work done at Johnstown, with the details of which the public is familiar.

In the death record Lycoming county is credited with 25, Clinton 30, Centre 4, Clearfield 2, Cameron 1, Dauphin 3 Huntingdon 2, Indiana 1, and Tioga 10. Total 78.

How Big They Feel.

Under the heading "To Arms! To Arms!" Williams, the man who sneaked out of Harrisburg on the evening of the 25th of June, and who edits a paper in philipsburg called the ledger spits out a little animosity, as follows, because we didn't call them a great big city over there:

The Bellefonte Republican speaks of this town as "A village." Great Scott! Be we men and suffer such dishonor? Let us go over and wash out the disgrace in BLOOD! Let us avenge this foul insult by wiping Bellefonte off the face of the yearth. Come to think, we will be busy all next week, but we urge the rest of you to go! go!! Go!!! Spare none from the hoary headed bald head down to the pulling infant in arms. "A village!" oh! this is too much!

Bellefonters in Philipsburg.

Att'y, Aaron Williams, of Bellefonte, who has the legislative bee buzzing around his bald head, was in town on Thursday.

Miss Emma Aikens, of Bellefonte, who is visiting Miss Madge Hoover, was one of the guests at the Club House hop, Tuesday evening.

Mr. James Rankin, of Bellefonte, spent Thursday with his daughter, Mrs. Kinsloe, wife of the Wage-Earner editor, and dropped into the Ledger office for a short call. Mr. Rankin is one of the fine-looking old gentlemen, of whom Bellefonte can boast of a large number, and holds his age remarkably well.—Ledger

Death of Little Jennie.

On Friday morning, July 25th, death entered the home circle of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Evey, of State College, and took from their midst a loving little daughter, aged 8 years, 2 months and 9 days. Only a few days ago and bright little Jennie was gay and happy and now we mourn her early death. We had only learned to love her ere she was called away. We mourn with the bereaved, but trust their loss is her gain.

A FRIEND.

Lost a Leg.

Robert Wilson, a young man from Renovo, lost a leg yesterday afternoon by trying to jump on a fast moving West bound freight, opposite the P. & E freight depot in Lock Haven. His leg was so badly mangled below the knee that it had to be amputated. He was taken to the residence of W. J. Carns, near the basin, where Dr. Watson, assisted by Dr. Ball, performed the operation. The unfortunate young man's mother and two brothers came down on the late train last night.

TWO HANDSOME CARRIAGES.

Mr. James H. Potter's Nobby Tonnont Shows Off to Good Advantage.

It is always pleasant to take charming young ladies to ride but, when in addition to the company of the ladies, you can drive such a nobby turnout as Mr James Potter drove on Monday evening the pleasure is simply intoxicating. On Monday Mr. Potter received two carriages—one a three seated one and the other a 2 seated one—from W. J. Meyer, coachmaker, at Pine Grove Mills, and and on Monady evening he took a party of young ladies, namely, Misses Nannie, Mary and Louisa Hoy, Elizabeth and May Blanchard and Blanche Hayes, out for a drive. They drove through all the principal streets of the town and the handsome turnout was the envy and admiration of all. Many persons stopped on the street and gazed in unfeigned wonderment on the handsome span of horses and sumptuous carriages, the likes of which was never before seen in Bellefonte, and the peer of which cannot be found even in New York City.

It is needless to say that Mr. Potter enjoyed the drive for who wouldn't? It is also needless to say that he is satisfied with his recent purchases as it now gives him the most complete livery in Central Pennsylvania. Handsome and fast horses, silver-mounted harness and elegant carriages he can furnish the most fastidious with a rig of which they can justly be found.

As to the builder of the carriages above referrad to, he has a reputation not excelled anywhere and these last exhibitions of his skillful workmanship speak louder than words of the state of perfection to which he has attained.

In Other Counties.

Recently Mrs. Frank Brown, of Lock Haven, fell in the yard in the rear of her residence and broke her arm.

Recent deaths in Mifflin county are: William M. Mayes, of Lewistown, aged 65 years; Mrs. Sarah E. Greer, of Armaugh township, aged 68; Mrs. McNeal Arnold, of Wayne township, aged 43; Moses Kreps, of Ferguson valley, aged 80 years.

The farm residence of Daniel Stough, one mile west of Adamsburg, Westmoreland county, with all its contents, was destroyed by fire on Monday night. A defective flue caused the fire. The loss $3,000, on which there is an insurance of $1,5000.

New Bloomfield (Perry county) News: John Wesley Williamson, of Liverpool, this county, who was working on the railroad at Bellwood, Blair county, had a leg and arm cut off on Monday, the 21st inst., from the effects of which he died the next day. His remains were taken to Liverpool for burial. He was about 45 years of age and unmarried.

On the 24 of January last, Mr. John M. McNemar, of Centre township, Perry county, lost a valuable watch. On the 18th inst., while loading hay, he noticed his watch lying near by. He wound it up and it started just as if had not been exposed to the elements for over six months.

The "Merry go Round."

Do you hear a whistle about every four minutes? If so that is the "Merry go round," on the green out towards Jackson's mill. It is running right along and generally is full. It may be an enterprise for the owners but, in our opinion, it don't go far toward building up a town. They bring nothing here, furnish no labor, but take all the pennies that children may have been saving up for weeks.

It is said that the authorities in Philipsburg gave one of the concerns the G. B., P. D. Q, not long ago. It seems but a just way of treating such enterprise. Besides all that they are dangerous. An old lady fell off of the one on the green the other day and was injured quite badly. But, notwithstanding the danger of them, they have a certain "go" about them which is attractive and they are very freely patronized, even by young lawyers and their lady friends.

Digging for Gold.

Since Mr. James Harris & Co. were so successful in their operations for oil they have concluded to dig for gold and accordingly have commenced operations just north of Potter's livery stable on Water street. Men are now at work with pick and shovel, tearing down the hill and men with horses and carts are carting the earth away. It is not known just how soon gold will be struck but Mr. Harris has good assurance that his work will not be in vain. It has long been thought that the Bellefonte hills were not all for nothing and now it will soon be proven.

Died.

Frank A., son of Potter and Laura Bryan, died July 23,1890, aged two years five months and thirteen days, of cholera infantum, while on a visit with his mother and brother Willie at his grandparents, Dr. Bigelow's, at Stormstown, Centre county.

A precious one from us is gone,
A voice we loved is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled,
God in his wisdom has recalled
And though the body moulders here,
The soul is safe in Heaven.

A SCREW LOOSE SOMEWHERE.

The Estimate Sent Out By Bricker Don't Hold Out.

A couple weeks ago Supervisor P. D Bricker, of Jersey Shore, sent to some papers in this county an estimate of the population of Centre county and headed his estimate by saying "These figures may vary slightly when the official result is announced, but that will be of very little difference.

He then then goes on to give the estimate for each precinct and sums the whole up in a grand total of 51,450 a the present population of Centre county as against a population of 37,920 in 1880, an increase of 13,528. Now if our readers will just take five minutes time and add up the estimate of the various precincts as given by Bricker they will find that the sums total, or the present population of Centre county, is but 43,382, 7,068 less than the toual population as given by the Supervisor and but 5,442 more than the population ten years ago.

Whether this mistake was purposely or unintentionally made matters not, one thing remains plainly evident, and that is that Supervisor Bricker's estimates are rendered comparatively worth less. It might be that this was the only mistake that was made in his department and it might be that it was only one of many. However that may be residents of the sixth census district of Pennsylvania will have to await the official returns from the Washington office to find out the correct population.
